Scout halts bear attack

By Frank E. Lockwood
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls High School senior Jared Stubbs, 17, proved he's smarter than the average bear last week.

Armed with Boy Scout common sense and a canister of pepper spray, he helped rescue a vacationing San Francisco woman and her growling Scottish terrier from a hungry black bear near Fourth of July Lake.

Stubbs and his father, state Rep. Mark Stubbs, ambushed the bear with spray after it invaded the campsite of Scott and Ann Stevens and their 7-year-old daughter, Sierra. The bear had trapped Ann Stevens in her tent and was rummaging for food when the Stubbses arrived.

The 10-minute encounter left Jared Stubbs shaken and full of adrenaline. Thursday, he described the bear as "twice the size of a big dog" and said it lunged at him after he sprayed it with pepper spray. Fortunately, a second spray from Mark Stubbs hit its mark, and the bear retreated.

Jared Stubbs said the bear was close enough to touch — as close as two feet away.

"I was scared to death," he said. Jared Stubbs is a member of his high school's football team. He's also an Eagle Scout. He was with his Latter Day Saint Seventh Ward Boy Scout troop when he encountered the imperiled tourist.

After beating the black bear, members of Varsity 81 moved the California family to safer ground — and gave them their own canister of pepper spray. Jared Stubbs was one of 14 scouts on a week-long, 50-mile backpacking trip. His troop spotted a number of bears during its trek, but kept its distance after Jared Stubbs' encounter. The Stevens escaped unharmed, but the bear was not entirely vanquished. It swiped food from Scott Stevens' backpack and absconded with another pack.

The California tourists weren't available for comment Thursday. But Jared Stubbs said the family was "pretty relieved" to survive a close encounter of the bear kind.

Ed Cannaday, a back-country ranger with the Sawtooth National Forest, said bear encounters are rare in Idaho, but "this year it's exploded — we've had all kinds of trouble."

"(The bears) came out of hibernation hungry, there wasn't a ready food supply, and they're still hungry," Cannaday said.

Costs, Republicans' dilemma — A4

The coalition had hoped to present its package of amendments to Mitchell's bill Thursday — until Congressional Budget Office Director Robert Reischauer briefed them on how much it would cost. Reischauer reportedly told the senators they would either need to radically scale back subsidies they hoped to offer or find some way to bring in a lot of money to pay for them.

One senator said Reischauer estimated the type of subsidies they were proposing would cost about $900 billion over 10 years — just $200 billion less than the $1.1 trillion cost of Mitchell's plan.

The bipartisan group said they would make their final decision on how many subsidies they could afford during a meeting Friday morning.

Sen. James Jeffords, R-Vt., one of the coalition members, said the group still hoped to produce a compromise and present it to Mitchell and Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole before the weekend.

"It is going to be more fiscally responsible than the Mitchell bill but more middle of the road than Dole," said Sen. James Jeffords, R-Vt.

Byrd, who is not a member of the coalition, expressed a growing sentiment in the Senate. "I can only hope that we will somehow come to our senses, take a reality check, try to put our political agendas aside... and enact sound, effective health care reform," he said.

Challis fires — A2

BOISE — Wayne Dawson knows of few things more important than the proper laundering of those bright yellow flame-resistant shirts 20,000 firefighters were wearing Thursday throughout the West.

Lives depend on it. "It has to meet certain specifications," said Dawson, the supply officer at the nerve center of America's war on forest fires.

"There can't be any starch, anything that leaves a residue" that could ignite, Dawson said. "That's in case the crews get into a flash fire or intense heat."

At the National Interagency Fire Center, Dawson is the quartermaster of manpower, supplies, aircraft and equipment the country needs to do battle with wildfires. No detail is too small.

After a summer that has seen 14,000 fires already burn 1.2 million acres since the Fourth of July weekend, Dawson has been forced to become a real juggler with still over 400,000 acres aflame in five states.

"We've had other years that were just as intense with the total volume of items," he said, surveying the loaded forklifts crisscrossing the floor of the center's main warehouse. "But the difference is most of our incidents, larger incidents, are spread out in such a large geographical area."

The hubbub of the command center underscores the point. Specialists are under the gun to stretch increasingly scarce resources to meet insistent requests for crews, tankers, helicopters and supplies from fire bosses on the lines in no less than a five states from the Canadian border to Mexico.

"It's been a busy two months — all geographi-

Crews close line to protect resort

Crews cut the final part of fire lines on either side of Upper Payette Lake Thursday to shore up the protective barrier between two out-of-control wildfires and the west-central Idaho resort of McCall.

Fire bosses oversaw additional burnout southeast of the small lake some 16 miles north of McCall to ensure that once the $2,000-acre Corral Fire merges with the $5,500-acre Blackwell Complex it does not burn back down the North Fork of the Payette River basin toward the populated area around Payette Lake.

Further south, where over 1,400 firefighters have been battling the 29,000-acre Idaho City Complex Fire northeast of Boise for three weeks, officials put together two crews of homeless men and women from the Boise area to maintain fire camps.

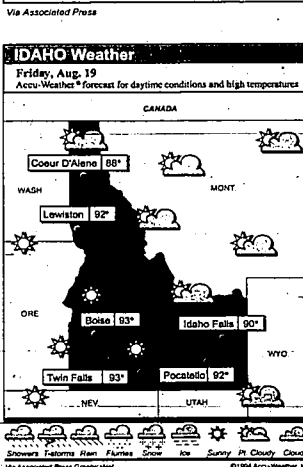

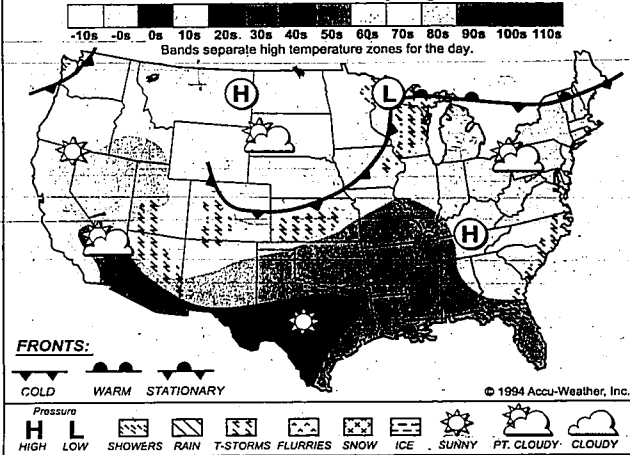

"These folks are excited to be out there," said Tanya Bullock, who is the Boise National Forest's crew coordinator and worked with the Idaho Empowerment Program to put the 45

Fires in wilderness halt trail, road travel

CHALLIS — Parts of the Challis National Forest remained closed Thursday to foot and motor traffic where a fire has burned its way through trails and roads in the Frank Church River of No Return Wilderness.

Still burning Thursday evening, the lightning-induced Pioneer fire had engulfed more than 4,650 acres of forest 32 miles west of Challis.
On Wednesday some structures were in danger, including the Guest Ranch and Loon Creek Guard Station, but back-burn efforts and structure protection by firefighters resulted in no structural damage or human losses, according to Jim James, incident information officer at the Challis National Forest.

By Thursday, night firefighters were concentrating on clearing and removing burnt materials causing safety hazards along the Loon Creek Road.

The closure order was set for areas between Loon Creek Summit northeast to the Custer-Lemhi county line and northwest to Cold Spring Creek and Bear Creek.

Portions of Little Loon Creek Trail and Soldier Mountain Trail were closed. Road closures include portions of the Forest Service roads No. 008, No. 012 and No. 172. Beaver-Loon Creek Road (No. 172) from the Estes-Mountain Road and Hecla Grouse Creek turn-off remain closed.

For further information about closings call 208-879-2285.

Also on the Challis Forest Thursday night, eight smoke jumpers and nine other firefighters were on the Norton Ridge II Fire, which covered about 10 acres 12 miles north-northeast of the Loon Creek Guard Station near the northern boundary of the wilderness and the Boise National Forest.

Meanwhile, Boiseans inhaled a lot of smoke Thursday because of a human-caused fire that started late Wednesday night in the Rocky Canyon about four miles east of Boise.

The fire, still under investigation, was contained at about 5 p.m. Thursday, according to Don Smurthwaite of the Boise District Bureau of Land Management.

Clinton plans news session for midday

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton will conduct an East Room news conference today in his second formal gathering with reporters this month.

The White House press office said Clinton plans to make a brief opening statement and take questions from reporters at the news conference scheduled to begin at 11:30 a.m. MDT.

The topic of his opening statement had not been determined, but Clinton was expected to take questions on the crime bill and health care reform, cornerstones of his legislative agenda that are languishing in Congress.

Bear

Bears can smell food far better than humans can, he said. In fact, some grizzlies can smell canned food — despite the airtight seal. "It's their most keen sense — what they live and die by," he said. He recommends cooking away from sleeping sites so food smells will not linger near tents.

Already this summer, two people have been scratched by bears, he said. One woman had a bear come into her tent on the North Fork of the Big Wood River. That camper reportedly had cantaloupe and bananas with her.

Another woman on the East Fork of the Salmon River tried to sneak up on a bear. The bear ended up sitting on her.

"It was a dominance display," Cannaday explained. The bear was making it clear who controlled the territory.

To avoid bear problems, Cannaday suggests giving the creatures a wide berth: He also suggests hanging all food — and garbage — in bear packs as far as possible from tent sites. In addition, campers should never keep food in their tents.

Banging pots and pans together will also keep bears at a distance, Cannaday said.

If a bear approaches you anyway, Cannaday advises, "just back out as slowly and quietly as your heart and head will let you."

Campers should use caution, according to Cannaday.

"When you're in the back country, you're in the bear house. People being careless will get the bears killed, and we want to avoid that," he said.

"Don's position on Second Amendment right has always been clear," Hansen said.

Franks said while he opposed the weapons ban and has received a total of nearly $100,000 from the NRA this election cycle, he voted to keep the crime bill from coming to the floor last week because he opposed the addition of some $5 billion in spending.

Franks said he'll vote for a trimmed-down bill even if it includes the weapons ban.

Tree ring study finds cool trend

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tree ring studies from the bristlecone pine, the oldest living tree species, suggest the Earth has been cooling for at least 6,800 years, researchers say.

In a study to be published Friday in the journal Science, two California Institute of Technology scientists said measurements of chemical ratios in the trunks of trees grown in the White Mountains of California show that temperatures declined about 5 degrees starting about 4800 B.C.

"This is consistent with other studies, such as the ice cores, and suggests that the cooling may be very well have been global," said Samuel Epstein, lead researcher in the study.

But he said the research cannot be related to current theories that the Earth now is warming because of the so-called greenhouse effect caused by an increase of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere.

Epstein said the bristlecone pine record of ancient temperatures cannot be related to any mathematical model of future changes because "the modern climate is much more unpredictable."

In modern times, there seems to be a feedback mechanism that is not well understood," he said. "When the climate gets a little warmer, the models go a little haywire."

In the study, Epstein and a Caltech graduate student, Xiaohong Feng, measured the ratio of two chemicals, deuterium and hydrogen, in the annual growth rings of bristlecone pine trunks that are known to be up to 8,000 years old. It is known that the ratio of deuterium and hydrogen increases in tree rings as the climatic temperature rises. A single tree ring is created annually by growth of a wood layer in the trunk.

Based on measurements in 50-year intervals from three trees, the researchers found that temperatures climbed slightly until about 6,800 years ago and then started a long cooling slide.

The trend flattened out from 2,000 to 400 years ago, and then another cold period started. The coldest period was between 1700 and 1900, and there was a slight warming at the end of the measured period.

Epstein said the last measured season was in 1950; the time at which the trees were cut. Wood from the trees have been preserved for scientific study because the bristlecone pine is known to be the longest-lived tree on Earth.

"This was a very special grove of trees," said Epstein. "I don't know of any other that goes back that far. This tree grows very slowly and the rings are very thin."

Ice cores drilled from Devon Island in far northern Canada also have given long-range temperature trends, but some experts have said this data may have been influenced by the ocean or by local effects.

Florida governor declares emergency, demands help

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — Gov. Lawton Chiles declared an immigration emergency Thursday and demanded federal help to cope with the largest surge of Cuban refugees since the 1980 Mariel boatlift.

Attorney General Janet Reno, who controls the Immigration and Naturalization Service, indicated the Clinton administration saw no reason to yet release emergency money or send the Navy to turn back the Cubans, as Chiles also requested.

Chiles' declaration authorizes the Florida National Guard to help deal with the nagging flotilla making a perilous 90-mile crossing of the Florida Straits.

"There are hundreds of people, perhaps thousands, massing on the shores of Cuba," Chiles said. "A true emergency exists for the state of Florida."

He urged Cubans to stay in their homeland, saying: "The Castro government is clearly weakening and the day of freedom in Cuba is near."

Fidel Castro apparently is carrying out his threat to open Cuba's ports after the worst rioting of his 35-year communist rule.

Forty-three rafts — often rebound contraptions made of inner tubes, canoes, even house doors — were intercepted Wednesday alone. One man died trying to reach freedom, and another reached shore on a stretcher. A 91-year-old woman crossed with her son rather than be left behind.

The Coast Guard has rescued more than 1,600 Cuban refugees from the Florida Straits in the last week, including 547 on Wednesday, the biggest single day since the 1980 exodus, and 72 by midday Thursday.

The Coast Guard believes the number will peak at 1,500 a day and then drop off, limited by the number

Treasury's chief lawyer resigns in Whitewater

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Treasury Department's top lawyer, Jean E. Hanson, resigned Thursday, the second Whitewater casualty in as many days.

Hanson's decision followed that of Deputy Secretary Roger Altman, a close friend of President Clinton's who announced Wednesday he was leaving.

Lawmakers had questioned the veracity of both officials at congressional hearings on the Whitewater affair two weeks ago.

Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, who accepted Hanson's resignation with regret, said he had recommended that she be succeeded as general counsel by Edward S. Knight, his executive secretary and senior adviser.

In her letter of resignation, Hanson did not mention the Whitewater affair but said working with Bentsen and Altman had been a privilege.

Joshua Steiner, a third Treasury official under fire in the Whitewater case, apparently will remain as Bentsen's chief of staff. But he could be reassigned, aides said.

The Whitewater controversy stems from a real estate venture involving of available boats and bad weather expected from Tropical Storm Chris, a U.S. government source said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"Even the numbers that we are seeing now could dwindle to nothing within three or four days," the source said.

A new arrival said he sailed with a group of 15 Cubans after hearing the Castro government was no longer stopping refugees from leaving.

"Before, when we try, they take everything. But now Castro says, 'Go,'" said Pedro Gonzalez, who sailed with his wife, three sons, daughter, son-in-law and the family dog from Mariel. About 125,000 Cubans came from the same port 14 years ago.

"Cuban journalists who spoke to The Associated Press by phone said refugees were setting off openly from beaches and harbors around Havana with no apparent interference from police.

President and Mrs. Clinton and the owner of a failed Arkansas savings and loan. The immediate issue involving Hanson and Altman was when and how often Treasury officials discussed with White House aides the government's investigation of the matter.

Altman was the first to disclose, during congressional hearings last February, Whitewater-related contacts between the White House and Treasury. Although he first acknowledged just one incident, he later amended his testimony to add more contacts.

Hanson was accused of failing to correct Altman's testimony immediately.

Hanson, 44, said she was rejoining the New York law firm of Fried, Frank, Harris, Shriver & Jacobson, where she had been a partner before her nomination in February 1993.

Senate intervenes again in senator's criminal case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate, intervening for a second time in Sen. Dave Durenberger's criminal case, is asking an appeals court to give a full hearing to his arguments for dismissing the indictment.

The Minnesota Republican is appealing a U.S. district judge's refusal to throw out the charges that he made and conspired to make false claims to the Senate, on grounds that they violate the Constitution's separation of powers doctrine.

The Senate last Saturday agreed to file a brief with the U.S. Court of Appeals that takes no stand on the merits of Durenberger's arguments but says they deserve to be heard.

"The federal courts of appeals have historically given full consideration to claims in appeals by members of Congress that civil or criminal prosecutions conflict with the constitutional separation of powers," said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine.

The Justice Department wants the appeal dismissed without a hearing.

Durenberger is charged with concealing his ownership in a Minneapolis condominium to collect $3,825 in Senate reimbursements for nights he spent there. Durenberger claims he did not violate Senate rules.

It was one of a series of financial misdeeds for which the Senate denounced Durenberger in 1990.

Anti-abortionist pleads innocent to murder charge

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Anti-abortion extremist Paul Hill pleaded innocent Thursday to charges of murdering an abortion doctor and a volunteer escort in a shooting outside a women's clinic.

The former Presbyterian minister, a slight smile on his face, walked into the courtroom in a jail-issue green jumpsuit. He was wearing leg shackles, and his hands were cuffed to a chain that wrapped around his waist.

The smile disappeared as Hill said nothing as his lawyer entered his plea except that he had no problem with the trial date of Jan. 30, 1995.

Hill, 40, a self-employed automobile restorer in Pensacola, is accused of the July 29 shotgun slayings of Dr. John B. Britton and retired Air Force Lt. Col. James H. Barrett. Barrett's wife, June, was wounded. The three were sprayed with multiple shots after driving into the parking lot of the Ladies Center.

He pleaded innocent to two counts of first-degree premeditated murder, punishable by death in Florida's electric chair or life in prison without parole, and one count each of attempted murder and shooting into an occupied vehicle.

He had been a national spokesman for a movement to define killing abortion providers as "justifiable homicide" to prevent deaths of unborn children.

How will health bill affect you?

After reform, insurance costs expected to rise for those under 30

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — How would the health reform bill under debate in the Senate affect your pocketbook?

If you are insured now, you might not see much difference, especially if you belong to a health maintenance organization.

If you have your own doctors now, you should be able to keep them, but it probably would be cheaper to join an HMO.

If your current plan provides less than standard benefits, you may have to pay more for one that does.

And if you are young — under 30 — your insurance bills probably would rise.

That's because the Senate plan's goal is to bring all people — young and old, sick and healthy — into pools sharing common risks and insurance rates.

That would tend to drive up costs of insuring the young and healthy, who now get cheaper insurance because their risk is low, while lowering costs for others.

If you are 65 or older, you would still get health care as you now — through Medicare — but you would be eligible for more benefits.

If you are poor, your health insurance costs would be minimal because you would be eligible for taxpayer-financed subsidies.

In sum, the plan sponsored by Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, aims to expand every American's opportunity to get a comprehensive set of health-insurance benefits.

But be forewarned: Every detail is subject to change before anything is written into law.

The Senate is amending Mitchell's plan daily; the House has yet to approve anything. Before any detail becomes law, the Senate and House have to agree on all of them, and President Clinton has to sign. There is a long way to go, with many changes yet to come, before that happens — if it ever does.

Nevertheless, Mitchell's plan is the one in the spotlight now, and its proposals illustrate the stakes for each American. As proposed, it would affect individuals and families in the following ways:

MANDATES

Mitchell hopes his bill's required changes in the way insurance companies do business will result in 95-percent of the U.S. population having health insurance by Jan. 1, 2000.

If that doesn't happen, his bill would require individuals in any state falling short of that mark to buy health insurance by Jan. 1, 2002. Employers in those states with 25 or more workers would be required to pay half their employees' insurance cost.

STANDARDIZED BENEFITS

Private insurance companies would be required to offer everyone a standard set of health-insurance benefits providing 16 kinds of medical services — including preventive care, ambulances, home-health care, and doctor and hospital treatments.

Mental illness, substance abuse and prescription drugs also would be covered, as would eye, ear, and dental service for those under age 22.

The precise scope and duration of each promised benefit would be defined later by a National Health Benefits Board.

But no insurance company would be permitted any longer to cut benefits, arbitrarily drop coverage or increase the rates of an individual who gets sick.

And every American would be free to choose from at least three health-insurance plans, one of which must let individuals pick their own doctor and pay the traditional fee-for-service way.

ESTIMATED COSTS

The bill would set four kinds of health insurance categories: the Congressional Budget Office estimates the first-year cost of average insurance premiums for each category as follows:

- $2,220 for single adults.
- $4,440 for married couples.
- $4,329 for one-parent families.
- $5,883 for two-parent families.

Those initial costs, based on 1994 prices, are about 1 percent less than privately insured people now pay on average, CBO said. For most people, those costs are subsidized by their employer — and would continue to be.

SUBSIDIES

Mitchell would create three categories of taxpayer-financed subsidies to help low-income people pay for health insurance. His categories are based on the federal definition of poverty.

In 1993, people were officially poor if their annual income was below:

- $7,357 for one person.

- $9,410 for two people.

- $11,521 for families of three.

- $14,764 for families of four.

- $17,459 for families of five.

Mitchell would give taxpayer-financed subsidies for the entire cost of health insurance to people whose income was at the poverty level or below.

He would pay part of the insurance costs for many of those with incomes up to twice the official poverty level, the exact amounts would be set on a sliding scale, falling as income rose.

Many pregnant women and children could get their total insurance costs subsidized up to 185 percent of the poverty level, and could get partial subsidies up to 300 percent of the poverty level.

And workers who lose their jobs temporarily could get subsidies to pay for their family's health insurance for up to six months.

Families could be eligible for more than one kind of subsidy; integrating the administration of them "would be extremely difficult," CBO said.

TAXES

The bill would impose a number of small taxes, including:

- A phased-in 45-cent hike in the per-pack tax on cigarettes, to 69 cents.

• A 1.75 percent tax on health-insurance premiums, paid by insurers, who would pass it along to customers in the form of higher fees or lower services.

• A hike in the excise tax on hollow-point bullets for handguns.

• A 25 percent tax on high-cost health plans — sure to be passed along to those plans' clients — that exceed norms for their region.

MEDICARE

The federal health insurance program for those 65 and over would grant a new prescription drug benefit beginning in 1999. Recipients would pay no more for those drugs than a "deductible" fee set by the secretary of Health and Human Services; CBO estimates that fee would be about $700 a year initially. A new long-term care benefit would also be available.

In addition, wealthy Medicare beneficiaries — including those with incomes over $80,000 and couples with incomes over $100,000 — would pay higher fees for buying Supplemental Medical Insurance, the plan that covers doctors' services. Their annual out-of-pocket expenses would be limited to $1,275 in 1999 however.

Two women console an unidentified worker after a construction crane accident at the Kingdome killed two workers and injured a third Wednesday night in Seattle.

2 Kingdome workers die when crane portion fails

SEATTLE (AP) — A basket atop a construction crane inside the Kingdome plummeted 250 feet to the ground, killing the two men in the basket and injuring the operator in the crane's cab.

Sandblasting the ceiling at its high point, the two painters were atop the nearly vertical crane when its top portion failed, fire department spokeswoman Georgia Taylor said.

The basket struck the crane's cab and "flattened that cab like a pancake," said worker Bob McCormick, who ran inside the stadium when he heard a loud crash. He said crane operator, Charles Cox, 25, of Edmonds, was asking what had happened as he struggled out of the cab.

Cox was in satisfactory condition Thursday. Jorge Sanchez Turinco, 39, of San Diego and William Lynn Louth, 37, of Portland, Ore., were killed.

The Kingdome was closed a month ago after ceiling tiles began falling from the stadium's ceiling during a Mariners baseball game. No one was hurt. All 40,000 tiles must be replaced.

Kingdome officials said all work at the stadium would be halted while the accident is investigated.

They had hoped to finish the renovations before the Seahawks' first regular season home football game Sept. 18. That target date is being reconsidered.

Tugboats to escort tankers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most oil tankers will be escorted through Alaska's Prince William Sound and Washington's Puget Sound by tugboats under new regulations the Coast Guard announced Thursday in an effort to prevent oil spills.

"Escort vessels reduce the possibility of a grounding or collision if a tanker loses its propulsion or steering system," the Coast Guard said.

The rule, effective in 90 days, requires that all large, single-hulled oil tankers weighing more than 5,000 gross tons must be accompanied by two escort vessels in those waters, the Coast Guard said.

Rep. Jolene Unsworth, D-Wash., and other Northwest lawmakers had been critical of the Coast Guard's failure to implement the rule since the agency was directed to do so in the Oil Pollution Act of 1990.

Congress passed the law four years ago in the wake of the Exxon Valdez spill in Alaska's Prince William Sound.

In addition to Puget Sound, the rule applies to the U.S. waters of Rosario Strait, Haro Strait, Boundary Pass, the Strait of Georgia and the Strait of Juan de Fuca east of New Dungeness Point, all in Washington.

The Coast Guard also is evaluating other U.S. waters where escorts should be required.

GOP risks voter retribution to kill Clinton's health plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republicans are in the grip of a classic political dilemma.

If they help pass health-care reform this year, they may boost President Clinton's 1996 re-election chances. But if they contribute to its demise, will frustrated voters blame them this fall?

The health strategy can be summed up in one phrase: We won't be rushed. Though Republicans contend it's because they want good health reform as opposed to bureaucratic "Clintoncare," the tactic leaves them open to Democratic charges of obstructionism.

Republicans delivered long opening statements for five days as Democrats pleaded with them to allow a vote on the first amendment to Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell's health bill expanding private coverage to many uninsured Americans.

Floor work is proceeding now, but at the less than breakneck pace of one or two amendments per day. And Republicans intend to keep it that way.

They debated for three hours Wednesday even after Democrats had said they would support a Republican amendment. The same thing happened Thursday when Mitchell rose to announce Democratic backing for another Republican amendment and asked for a voice vote. Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., turned him down and requested four more hours of debate and a roll call.

"A bad bill is worse than no bill," says Republican National Committee chairman Haley Barbour. "The American people are telling Congress to slow down and do it right."

Political scientist Tom Mann, director of governmental relations at Brookings Institution, said a filibuster to block action "would be a terrible mistake" for the party. Democrats want there to be a price if politicians go home empty-handed to campaign for re-election.

"Voters are going to say, 'What did you do on crime? Do we have universal health care?'" Labor Secretary Robert Reich said Thursday on Fox Morning News. "And the members of Congress are not going to want to be nay-sayers."

The health-care stakes are enormous for Clinton. He has made it the centerpiece of his first term, the predominant test of his ability to get things done. Failure could hurt him badly in 1996.

Republicans, too, have a lot at stake this fall — not only their seats but also a shot at winning back control of the Senate.

But they've been emboldened by Clinton's problems in recent months, particularly a slide in support for the complicated administration health plan the Clintons and congressional Democrats have now shored up.

The case for blanket opposition originated with Bill Kristol, head of the Project for the Republic Future. He is advising Republicans to oppose the House, Senate and White House plans and tells them "don't be intimidated by Democratic complaints about obstructionism."

"They should make the case that this point is to admit failure, go home, and start over next year," Kristol says. "Republican candidates will benefit if they proudly go to the country and say 'we helped save you from these ill-considered pieces of legislation.'"

Even as they rebuke Republicans for blocking progress, Democrats themselves are worried about being depicted as intransigent. They acceded this week to a Republican amendment in the Senate, then engaged in a round of self-congratulation over their bipartisan spirit.

One Republican campaign official said his candidates worried about sounding negative on health reform when the momentum was on Clinton's side.

"There were concerns that we would be seen as obstructing something popular," said the official. "Now it's turned."

Playing with lighter likely caused blaze

CARBONDALE, Ill. (AP) — A fire that killed eight children likely was started by the youngsters playing with a lighter or matches, authorities said.

Fire Chief Clifford Manis said Wednesday the only survivor, an 8-year-old girl, told investigators she saw at least one of the children playing with a lighter hours before the fire early Sunday.

The girl told investigators she mistakenly thought she put out a smoldering blanket and later awoke to find the house filled with smoke, said police Chief Don Strom.

Camilla Foulks, 25, lost her three children in the fire. Authorities said Foulks was supposed to have been babysitting but instead went to a liquor store, a friend's house and to a bar to dance.

Jury debunks miracle check

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A man who mistakenly received a government check for nearly $837,000 may have believed it was a miracle, but a jury didn't.

William H. Irvin III allegedly cashed the $836,929.19 check in June 1992, a federal jury concluded Wednesday. It convicted him of knowingly spending government money, filing a false tax return and laundering some of it through cashier's checks.

Irvin said he believed the money was a gift from God because it appeared after he prayed for self-sufficiency on a lonely road one night.

He is an airport security officer who makes about $12,000 a year.

The check was the result of a computer error. Irvin, a Persian Gulf War veteran, was only entitled to $183.69 from the government.

Irvin faces up to 43 years in prison and a $7.25-million fine.

Shuttle launch aborted

Computers shut down engines prior to liftoff

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The space shuttle Endeavour roared to life Thursday as the countdown clock read zero.

Then suddenly it shuddered into silence — its main engines shut down before the scheduled dawn launch because of an overheated fuel pump.

It was the fifth engine shutdown at the pad in 13 years of shuttle flights and the third since April 1993. But none had been so close to launch.

Deidra Baker, wife of the shuttle commander, was watching from the launch control center three miles away with their two daughters. Her voice quivered as she described seeing husband Michael Baker stuck inside a vibrating, rumbling, 2,000-ton rocket ship filled with explosive fuel.

Baker said he and the five other astronauts fell silent when red warning lights flashed in the cockpit.

The astronauts were strapped in their seats for about an hour after the launch was aborted, as ground crews rushed to make sure Endeavour was safe. The launch team's prime concern was the possibility of hydrogen fuel leaks; that's why 300,000 gallons of water were sprayed at the pad.

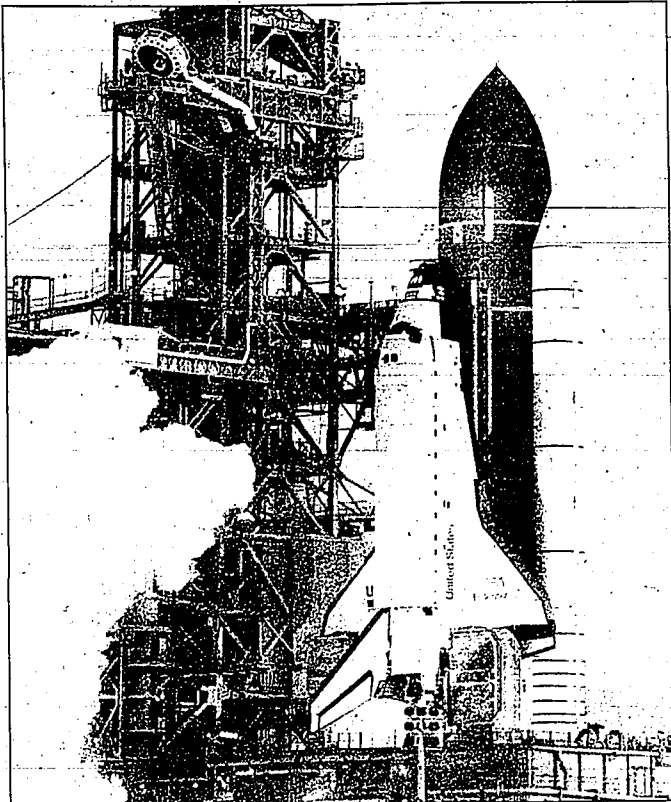

"I think everything went well. The systems did their job and shut us down," said Baker, a Navy captain and former test pilot. "We got out of there nice and safely."

When the three main engines fired on cue 6 1/2 seconds before liftoff and spewed huge clouds of steam, NASA's deputy manager for engines, Boyce Mix, said he thought "we had it in the bank."

One by one, the engines were turned off automatically by computer command, starting 1-9 seconds before the solid rocket boosters were to have ignited and the shuttle taken off.

NASA's countdown clock got all the way down to zero when the launch was halted.

Mix said the problem was with a high-pressure fuel pump in main engine No. 3 that overheated. The pump had just been refurbished, and there was no immediate explanation for why it failed, he said. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration is testing a redesigned version of the pump that's intended to improve safety while reducing costly maintenance; it's due to fly in space next year.

"I don't know how you spell 'Aw shucks,'" but that is the term that applies," said launch director Bob Slack. Arthur C. Clarke, author of "2001: A Space Odyssey," had hoped to see his first launch since 1975.

"Even though I'm disappointed, it was a thrill to see the shuttle and to hear it for a few seconds," Clarke said. "We were quite obviously very concerned," Mrs. Baker said, sighing. "But I don't think anybody's happier than the families that the safety system worked and it was OK."

If an engine had failed soon after liftoff, Baker would have had to attempt a dangerous emergency landing back at Kennedy Space Center.

Such an emergency landing, which would require the twin boosters to burn out and then jettison, has never been attempted. During the early ascent, there is no emergency escape system for the crew. The only emergency escape on the pad is by basket down a slide wire 195 feet high and 1,200 feet long.

The East-montoring mission — a repeat of an April flight — was expected to be delayed at least a month. Shuttle managers were debating whether to fly Endeavour next as planned or proceed with Discovery's scheduled Sept. 9 launch.

Nolan Ryan challenges Americans to exercise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former fastballer Nolan Ryan tossed a challenge at America Thursday, asking everyone to get at least 30 minutes of moderately intense exercise every day.

"The point is that it doesn't matter at what age or what stage you are in life," Ryan said at a news conference to promote a new booklet, "The Nolan Ryan Fitness Guide." "You can get active."

The free booklet is a manual of simple exercise routines and advice designed by Ryan, who retired last year after 27 years in major league baseball. It is being printed and distributed in cooperation with the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports and the Department of Health and Human Services.

James Rippe, a cardiologist who collaborated with Ryan on the booklet, said inactivity is a major health problem in America.

The booklet suggests starting with such easy everyday activity as walking to work, taking the stairs instead of the elevator, tossing a ball with the dog, or cutting the lawn with a push mower.

Unlike the people he is trying to reach, Ryan said Thursday he is trying to make an adjustment from an intensely physical life — including daily four- to five-hour workouts — to conditioning for good health and weight control.

Baseball legend Nolan Ryan, 47, with Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala, attends a Washington news conference Thursday.

Ryan, 47, retired last year from the Texas Rangers. He is baseball's all-time strikeout leader, with 5,714, and the only pitcher to throw seven no-hitters.

Jury agrees: Coffee too hot at McDonalds

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — A jury awarded $2.9 million in damages to a woman who suffered third-degree burns after spilling a cup of McDonald's coffee.

Stella Liebeck, 81, said in her lawsuit that McDonald's serves coffee that is too hot.

Her lawyer, Reed Morgan, said there have been several lawsuits over the temperature of McDonald's coffee, which is 180 to 190 degrees when served. But he believed that Liebeck's case, decided by a state District Court jury on Wednesday, was the first to reach a verdict.

Liebeck testified she was riding in a car in February 1992 when she put the cup of coffee between her legs while she removed the cap. The coffee spilled and she suffered severe burns on her legs, groin and buttocks. Morgan said the woman's medical bills totaled close to $10,000.

House clears Clinton's defense bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawmakers have added money to Air Force bomber programs, cut funds for peacekeeping, increased the military pay raise and urged President Clinton to end the arms embargo over Bosnia.

But in other respects, the $263.8 billion defense spending plan for 1995 closely reflects White House priorities. With a 280-137 House vote Wednesday evening, only final Senate action — which could come later this week — remains before the defense authorization bill goes to the White House for Clinton's signature.

The measure slightly increases Clinton's defense budget request for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 and represents an increase of $2.8 billion over this year's defense budget.

Adjusted for inflation, that translates into a defense spending cut of just under 1 percent.

In all, 18 percent of the total federal budget would go into defense under this legislation.

Republicans and conservative Democrats repeated their warnings that the budget further erodes military readiness. It is the 10th consecutive defense plan since the peak of the Reagan defense buildup in 1985 that, when adjusted for inflation, provides less for defense than the previous year.

"We may not have a hollow force today, but the Clinton defense plan is heading us insistently down this slippery slope that many of us remember from the 1970s," said Rep. Floyd Spence, R-S.C., the ranking Republican on the armed services panel. Included in the defense bill for fiscal 1995 is authorization for another aircraft carrier, three guided-missile destroyers and six C-17 airlifters. It authorizes development funds for a new attack submarine, the F-22 fighter, a Marine Corps V-22 tilt-rotor troop carrier, and a new reconnaissance helicopter for the Army.

In the only significant cut from Clinton's weapons procurement request, the House-passed bill reduces funding for the troubled Tri-Service Standoff Attack Missile, or TSSAM, saving $298 million. Clinton had sought funding to buy 48 of the missiles.

The House-passed measure would buy 15 TSSAMs for research and testing purposes.

Editorial

Does right to bear arms include loose cannons?

A semantics lesson, courtesy of the Bard:
"A rose by any other name," wise William wrote, "would-smell as sweet."

So true. Even now, in the 20th century, a rose is still a rose. Even if you rename it "onion" or "gym shoe," it still smells nice.

Same goes for a misguided mob. You can call it a "militia," but it still smells like a mob.

Which brings us to Sam Sherwood, the guy from Blackfoot who travels around promoting "militia units." His next stop is Twin Falls, where he has a meeting scheduled next week.

The "militia" idea appears to be a reaction to one of the prize arguments of the gun-control lobby. You see, the Second Amendment says, "A well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." Some gun-control supporters interpret that to mean the right to own guns doesn't apply to individual citizens at all — only to the state militia.

So Sherwood and his followers want to call themselves a "militia" — thereby implying an exemption from gun laws.

Now, we don't want to debate the merits of gun control or the philosophical roots of the Second Amendment. The meaning of "well-regulated militia" has been argued for years, and we can't settle it here.

We just want to say this: Anybody with an ounce of sense can see that Sherwood's "militia" notion is bogus. Whatever the writers of the Constitution may have had in mind when they wrote the phrase, "well-regulated militia," they certainly didn't mean a gang of malcontents looking for an excuse to pack iron.

Idaho law does mention a state militia. According to the law, Idaho's militia basically consists of all able-bodied men, and the governor can call them into service if need be.

But the law also prohibits independent military organizations organized without state sanction.

Theoretically, we guess, the governor could give Sherwood's group his stamp of approval. But we can't imagine why any governor would want this bunch rattling around thinking it had some kind of official mandate.

We're not sure what kind of mischief Sherwood has in mind, but mischief it surely is. To anyone who is thinking about signing up, we recommend a cold compress and a nap.

Health care getting greedy

How do you remember the cartoon in the paper last week where it showed the clouds of greed over the ball park? Well, the same thing is happening to the health industry.

According to Dan Rather, the health industry through the lobbyists have already spent $100 million to buy the Legislature to pass the universal health plan. But we don't have a plan.

This has been done before. Medicare was also bought for $100 million by the same group. This was the greatest boondoggle of all time. It was supposed to help the old people and the poor. But every dime of Medicare went directly to the health industry. The old people and the poor still paid the same for health care that they had always paid and the Medicare money went directly to the doctors and providers as an outright gift.

So the health providers want to have this doubled. But the government can't do it. To do so, taxes would have to be raised 85 percent. We give all we make now for six months for taxes. Under the new plan, we would be working 10 months for the government — God forbid — just to donate another $158 billion to the health industry.

Let's not kill the goose that lays the golden eggs.

Airship America close to end

Circa 1995? As an airplane climbing too high and too fast, Airship America has lost her life, stalled and is spiraling down, out of control. The scientific instruments are wildly aghast. Passengers want to abandon ship one-by-one to the ocean below. Others frantically pull the control-yolk nose up. Still others sit in dazed hopelessness, chanting death songs. The one who alone has the answer has lost the credibility.

Too bad; a brilliantly designed and luxuriously appointed Airship America a few seconds south of oblivion, its passengers bickering and arguing the merits of fruitless activities.

We created hero-pilots to guide us, only to find their superstories fatally flawed by myriad scandals. We created reams of legal dams to protect us and discovered them to be dikes of sand. We taxed ourselves beyond our limits of endurance to build highways to heaven, a magic, more injection wells endlessly sucking resources into the depths. We built moral and ethical edifices of stone, now cracking and crumbling amidst the onslaught of the wind, water and fire of changes coming too fast.

Perhaps it is (just about) time each and every person on Airship America seriously ask the fundamental questions: Who am I? Where did I come from? Where am I going? Washington, Boise, the suburban preacher, are utterly incapable of answering those questions for us. Am I a high-class animal born to kill or be killed? A middle-class animal with no more right to exist than a chinook salmon? A god who will one day rule another planet? A ball of cow dung covered in grace? One more mold spore on the surface of a rotting orange? A former ant who will one day be a peach pit? An entity incapable of knowing (yet asking) what it's all about? A temporary manifestation of cosmic energy destined to return to its source?

The answer each of us receives/creates for these simple questions every child asks shapes the destiny of Airship America. Perhaps were we to trust the one, as he announces "nose down" (in a posture of humility), the airship will paradoxically regain airspeed and lift? Perhaps...

Clinton: Member of Church of What's Happening Now

President Clinton claims God is on his side — a claim Democrats and liberals of his stripe have in the past criticized Republicans and conservatives for making.

In a talk to a mostly black church in Maryland last Sunday, the President said it is "the will of God" that Congress pass the crime bill. He didn't say whether God would accept any amendments, so one is left to accept by faith that God supports the entire package. The Almighty apparently knows how to play political hardball. No compromise for Him.

Incredibly, none of the big media have editorialized (as of last Wednesday) against the president's invocation of God. Recall the outrage many expressed when Republicans and religious leaders claimed divine support for public policy issues. Remember church-state separation, critics say. Furthermore, people who bring God into the political arena are often said to diminish religion. Throughout the 1980s, religious conservatives were denounced by religious liberals (and the Pagan Left) as being "un-Christian" and in violation of all sorts of spiritual statutes.

The imposition of morality, especially that which proponents claimed could be found in the Bible, was regarded as a threat to the original purpose of the founders, which was supposed to be religious freedom and tolerance for all.

Fund-raising letters from the American Civil Liberties Union, People for the American Way and other groups continually reminded us of the danger of claiming to speak for God on virtually anything.

Suppose Pat Robertson's Christian Coalition claimed to have heard that God is opposed to the crime bill? Imagine the uproar that would cause. So, what's the difference when President Clinton makes the claim? And if God is for the crime bill, why doesn't the president ask for a real miracle and get it divinely paid for without imposing new taxes?

The Clintonites (like some Republicans) are selective in their appeals to divine truth. During the 1992 Democratic Convention in New York, Clinton misquoted the Bible and had St. Paul saying, "Our eyes have not seen, nor our ears heard, nor our minds imagined, what we can build."

I think he meant to read this verse: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

Al Gore chimed in at the same convention with this misquotation: "Do not lose heart. The nation will be renewed." Nothing in the Bible comes close to that one.

President Clinton's biblical shirshap has extended to other issues. He defends his support for abortion rights, saying the word "abortion" doesn't appear in the Bible, and for gay rights, because there's nothing about homosexuality in the Ten Commandments.

I looked up crime bill in my biblical concordance and it isn't there, so if God has a position on it, He must have communicated it directly to President Clinton.

But God does have a position on crime. He's against murder and stealing. His position on these crimes is in the Ten Commandments, which the Supreme Court says can't be displayed in public schools. Wouldn't it make more sense to fight crime by drumming the principles of the Ten Commandments into children rather than to pass a pork-laden crime bill? The former cures the inner cause of crime, the latter is like a topical lotion that treats symptoms, but can never reach the root cause.

During the Civil War, a clergyman wrote President Lincoln, saying he believed the Lord was on "our" side. Lincoln responded: "I know that the Lord is always on the side of the right. But it is my constant anxiety and prayer that I and this nation should be on the Lord's side."

That attitude is quite contrary to President Clinton's, who seems to be a member of the Church of What's Happening Now.

Murder of infants sickening

A small story in your Aug. 16 paper is both sad and upsetting to this reader. The story tells of a teen-age father found guilty of first-degree murder of his infant son and sentenced to "life in prison," which means eligible for parole in 10 years.

It is truly sad to examine this situation. An infant left without chance to advance with life. A teen-ager behind bars and, unfortunately, this same young man gave in to a bad choice of how to deal with a baby.

The courts rightly were strict in this issue and, as one can infer from this story, the judge decided to be firmer in punishment than the prosecuting attorney recommended.

While I am glad to see a judge and court stand up to such senseless actions, I am also sickened by widespread hypocrisy when it comes to senseless killings of infants. There have been a number of articles over this past year detailing where young mothers have killed their infant children and we are told to feel sorry for the mothers.

It is a shame when any child is beaten and killed. It is a worse shame when our legal society accepts killings by mothers as anything less than what they are: murder. When will those individuals who rail for "equal justice" take off the blinders and stop their gender hypocrisy of punishment for males and excuses for females?

This teen father did wrong, but so too have other young mothers. Is it possible the social engineers find it impossible to condemn such actions by mothers because it might hit too close to home with addressing abortion? I truly wonder.

Treat babysitter with respect

With the beginning of school quickly approaching and we're all getting back to our "regular" schedules and your children will once again be dropped off at the babysitters, I think it would be a good time to think about what your child-care provider should expect from you.

Give your child-care provider your schedule and try to keep it. Don't assume she "won't mind" if you drop your children off earlier than expected or pick them up later than scheduled.

Call her and ask her if it would be all right to do so. She will appreciate it.

We set up a payment schedule with her and stick to it. She has bills to pay too and having to wait for your payment could create a problem. If you have a problem, talk to her. She will probably be more than willing to work with you. Do get back on your regular payment schedule as soon as possible.

If your children are ill, please make other arrangements until they are well. She and the other parents will appreciate it.

Never drop your child off if she isn't expecting you. Call first.

The above mentioned does not necessarily apply to everyone in every situation. But she always deserves some courtesy and a lot of respect for what she does. After all, she is taking care of the children that are so precious to you.

Experts: No foolproof way to safeguard weapons-grade plutonium

MOSCOW (AP) — Russian experts conceded Thursday there is no foolproof way to safeguard weapons-grade plutonium, but insisted they have prevented any such thefts.

However, The New York Times said Russia does not have any way to determine whether nuclear materials might be missing. The paper quoted Russian nuclear officials and scientists as saying Russia's monitoring system is ineffective for protecting or accounting for such materials.

Yuri Rogozhin, spokesman for Russia's nuclear regulatory agency, Gosatomnadzor, disputed that, while agreeing there are dangers.

"A smart man can cheat any system," he said. "Of course, there is a theoretical possibility of stealing nuclear materials."

But he said Russia's method of accounting for nuclear weapons equals any in the world.

The issue arose this week when Germany announced its fourth seizure of an illegal shipment of radioactive material since May. The Germans think the materials came from warhead factories or weapons labs in Russia, but Moscow contends there is no evidence any came from their facilities.

All of the seizures involved amounts far below that needed to produce a nuclear bomb. But Western authorities worry that enough plutonium could be smuggled out of the former Soviet Union that would allow terrorists or aggressive regimes to build bombs.

As if to underscore the threat, Russian police said today they had detained three men for allegedly trying to sell an unidentified radioactive substance for $1 million in the Baltic city of Kaliningrad.

Russian officials say low-level uranium and other radioactive materials have been stolen in the past but cannot be used to make bombs.

Experts in the West say conditions exist in Russia for theft of plutonium and enriched uranium used to make nuclear bombs. But they say there is little evidence that any has actually been smuggled out.

Anti-Vuorinen, director of Finland's Center for Radiation and Nuclear Safety, said Russia's civilian nuclear facilities generally have good security, but poorly paid workers might be tempted to steal.

"Russian society as a whole is in such a state of difficulty," he said in a telephone interview from Helsinki. "As for the real situation at military facilities, we know very little."

Rogozhin conceded the dangers.

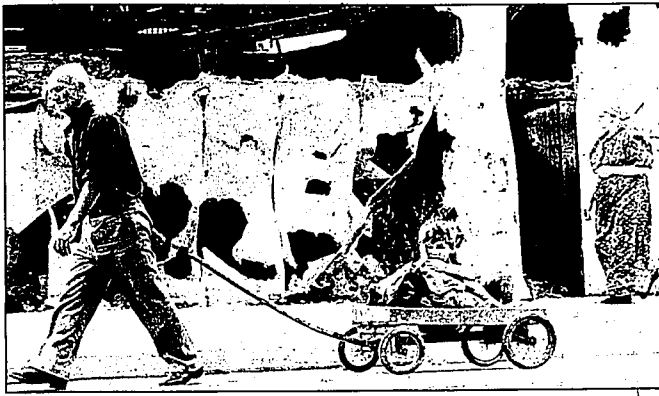

"Of course, Russia's current dire economic situation makes it more difficult to watch over the safety of nuclear materials, but it's all the more so. There is not a single bit of concrete evidence that any weapons-grade plutonium has been stolen," he said.

Earlier this year, the agency's chief, Yuri Vishnevsky, said Russia still had no law regulating use of nuclear materials. Moscow press reports said.

Vishnevsky was out of town Thursday, his deputy, Alexander Gutsalov, said.

Asked whether Vishnevsky's comments indicated there is a gap in Russia's nuclear security system, Gutsalov said angrily the system is safe "for normal conditions."

American and German diplomats met with Russian officials Tuesday to discuss improving accounting methods for nuclear materials. Tomorrow, said Bernd Schmiedbauer, a top aide to German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, will arrive Saturday.

Hasan Bahtanovic pulls his grandson, 6-year-old Mirza, along a Sarajevo street with his grand-mother, Halida, following behind, as they go to visit relatives on Thursday. The family are refugees from Rogatica in eastern Bosnia and have been in Sarajevo for two years.

Bosnian Serbs announce possibility of formal union

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — In another slap at world opinion, Bosnian Serb leaders announced Thursday they will formally seek to link their territories with Yugoslavia and Serb-held parts of Croatia.

The move appeared timed to increase Bosnian Serb opposition to an internationally negotiated peace plan that would require the Serbs to give up nearly a third of the 70 percent of Bosnia they control. Bosnian Serbs are to vote on the proposal in an Aug. 27-28 referendum.

Bosnia's Muslims and Croats accepted the plan, but the Bosnian Serb leadership remains vehemently opposed.

Momcilo Krajisnik, a key aide to Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic, said Bosnian Serbs and their ethnic brethren in Croatia would formally ask Serbia and Montenegro for permission to join them and create "Greater Serbia."

But Krajisnik, in comments quoted by the Bosnian Serb news agency Sma from a session of the self-proclaimed Bosnian Serb assembly in Pale, seemed to be speaking mostly for effect.

President Slobodan Milosevic of Serbia, who broke all formal ties with Bosnian Serbs over their refusal to accept the peace plan, is unlikely to endorse such a union. He wants to get crushing U.N. economic sanctions lifted on the Serbian-dominated remnants of Yugoslavia.

The sanctions also have caused increasing anti-Serb sentiment in the other remaining Yugoslav republic, Montenegro, which is unlikely to favor absorption into a Greater Serbia.

In another defiant act by the Bosnian Serbs, senior military officials withdrew permission for the evacuation of dangerously ill women and children from the Muslim enclave of Gorazde in Serb-held eastern Bosnia.

Peter Kessler, a U.N. relief official, said Serb leaders again tried to link the evacuation to the release of prisoners, something he said was "totally unacceptable."

"There are people who need to get out, and they are in danger of dying if they don't," he said.

Kessler said the 22 people due for evacuation included two women with breast cancer, a premature infant with jaundice that could lead to brain damage, preteen children with kidney and heart problems, and several with serious eye problems.

In another incident, Serbs held up a relief convoy for Gorazde on Wednesday, taking flour from the trucks before allowing it to pass. A second convoy was prohibited from going to Sarajevo.

Bosnia's Serbs have grown increasingly defiant over international pressure to accept the peace plan, contending they are prepared to fight on despite the decision by Serbia — their main supplier during the 28-month war — to cut ties Aug. 4.

There have been daily violations of a February cease-fire in Sarajevo in recent weeks. The heaviest fighting has been to the north around Breza, where troops of Bosnia's Muslim-led government claimed substantial gains this month.

Algerian earthquake collapses houses as people sleep; 150 dead

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — A powerful earthquake ripped through northwest Algeria as people slept Thursday, killing at least 150 people and collapsing thousands of mud-brick homes.

Rubble clogged the streets, slowing rescue teams.

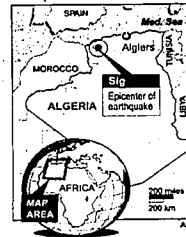

At least 289 people were injured and 8,000 to 10,000 were left homeless by the quake, which struck in the Mascara region, 250 miles west of Algiers, local rescue officials said.

The quake had a preliminary magnitude of 5.6, according to the Algerian Center for Astrophysical Research, and hit hardest in rural areas.

Thousands of straw-and-mud brick dwellings collapsed on their sleeping occupants. Where structures remained intact, terrified survivors ran into the streets to keep worried vigils for aftershocks.

Several aftershocks followed, the strongest with a preliminary magnitude of 5.1, the Algerian center said.

"I lost my wife, my children, my house, everything," said an elderly man in the village of Hassine, which was almost entirely destroyed by the quake. "I have nothing left."

Western agencies weighed whether to send in aid teams because of threats by Islamic extremists against foreigners. More than 4,000 people have been killed in 26 years of Islamic revolt, including 58 foreigners killed in the past year. If the government does request outside help, "we'd have to have very strong security guarantees for our teams," said Alain Frelaud, a spokesman for Medecins Sans Frontieres, a relief agency.

Local officials appealed for blood donations, food, milk and blankets, and warned that drinking water could soon be in short supply. Rescue work was hampered because many roads were blocked by debris, local workers said.

The British Geological Survey said the quake hit at 2:13 a.m. local time (7:13 p.m. MDT Wednesday), with its epicenter near the town of Sig.

Hardest hit were Bou Hanifia, a hot springs resort, and Bou Heni, Algerian radio said. The quake also struck the city of Mascara and was felt in Oran, the regional capital on the coast, about 62 miles north of Mascara.

The last major quake in Algeria hit the Tipaza region, 44 miles west of Algiers, in 1989, leaving 30 people dead and several hundred homeless.

Oil minister urges workers to return

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — Rioters vented their anger with Nigeria's military government Thursday by burning down a mansion and a hotel that were perks of the army's long and lucrative rule.

The violent protests came one day after Gen. Sani Abacha, trying to end a week of oil strike aimed at toppling his government, said he was firing the leaders of the two major oil unions.

His announcement had no effect on the strike that has halved Nigeria's main source of revenue and crippled transportation across this nation of 90 million people, Africa's most populous.

Petroleum Minister Don Egiebo told reporters in Abuja, the capital, that the government was expecting the oil workers to be back at work Monday, though he did not say why.

He said the government would talk to the unions "as long as they don't have political undertones."

The two major unions, however, said they would ignore Abacha's order to dissolve their governing board, and would continue their strike and file a lawsuit challenging the ruler's action in Lagos High Court on Monday.

The oil workers are demanding that Abacha, a key figure in three military coups during the past decade, step down and install a democracy.

NATO pays tribute to secretary general

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — NATO paid tribute Thursday to secretary general Manfred Woerner, whose death last week leaves the Western alliance facing a difficult task in choosing a successor.

"I know that today we no longer live in a world of heroes, but to me Manfred Woerner had all the requisite qualities," acting Secretary General Sergio Balanzino told a meeting of ambassadors from NATO's 16 member nations.

Balanzino recalled that Woerner defied his doctors to chair vital meetings that led to NATO air power being used in the Bosnian war. Woerner died Saturday after a two-year battle with cancer.

Official talks on replacing the widely-respected former German defense minister will not begin until some time after Friday's memorial service for Woerner in Brussels.

But senior officials attending the memorial are expected to start informally discussing a replacement, NATO sources said.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher flew to Brussels Thursday and met privately with Balanzino. NATO diplomats said Christopher would likely talk with allied officials about Woerner's succession and other issues including Bosnia and reports of plutonium smuggling from Russia.

Hunted writer begins 'new life' in West

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Saying she has begun a new life in the West, author Taslima Nasrin emerged from hiding Thursday and vowed to keep writing despite death threats from Muslim extremists in her native Bangladesh.

"I wish to continue my fight against fundamentalism, which is spreading darkness to many parts of the world," Ms. Nasrin, 32, said in her first public appearance since fleeing Bangladesh on Aug. 10.

The soft-spoken author came out of seclusion to accept a $20,000 award from the Swedish PEN club, a branch of the international writers' group.

Shortage of food, transportation continues to plague Rwandan refugees

BUKAVU, Zaire (AP) — On a muddy hillside teeming with Rwanda's poor, a stooped and aged woman with an empty pot tried and failed to beg a little food from her neighbors.

Her begging is a poignant illustration of the lack of international aid for refugees in this dusty town. Aid organizations deliver only to six refugee camps 40 to 60 miles to the west which hold an estimated 320,000 people. But there are 60,000 refugees in Bukavu, and the organizations disagree about how much money they should show to the town's 60,000 squatters.

The donors are trying to use food to get the refugees to leave town and head for the camps. More than 2,000 refugees arrive every day, but UNHCR has enough trucks to move only about 1,000 to camps.

They are mostly ethnic Hutus who fled Rwanda fearing Tutsi revenge for massacres in the 14-week civil war in which as many as 500,000 Tutsis were slaughtered.

"I have been putting pressure on the World Food Program since July 20 to face up to the reality that we must deliver food in town," the head of Bukavu's U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees office, Peter Romanovsky, said Wednesday.

But the head of the U.N. World Food Program's rapid-response team in Bukavu, Trevor Page, insisted malnutrition rates in Bukavu's squatter camps were not alarming and that the outlying camps were much worse.

"There are no starvation deaths in Bukavu. None," he said.

There is hunger. Many refugees claim they have no money for food and some, such as the old woman, resort to begging scraps from others. "We have been here a month and no food has been given out. Families try to cope, but if you don't have money, you don't eat," said Pierre Muderwa, one of those camped out in the town.

Page said the refugees have looted Cyangugu, the Rwandan town just across the border which is in a zone protected by French troops who will hand over the town to Ethiopian forces on Friday.

Paul Sitam, the regional director for CARE, said his agency estimates 200,000 to 250,000 new refugees will trek to Bukavu when the French complete their withdrawal from Rwanda next week.

"That number would destroy us," said Romanovsky, who insisted the U.N.'s food agency already is not delivering enough food to Bukavu. "I am not delivering in town because I don't have it."

Other relief workers, including CARE's Sitam, also say the food deliveries have been slow. But Page insists he has enough food on hand to feed 100,000 people for three weeks and that more is arriving each day.

"I am building up stocks," said Page. The decision not to distribute food in Bukavu was taken jointly, Page said, by WFP, the UNHCR and the International Committee of the Red Cross.

"UNHCR is absolutely not pressuring WFP to do food distributions in town," Page said.

The strategy, he said, aims to prevent another Goma, the Zairian border town further north where tens of thousands have died from cholera, dysentery and other disease.

"There was no cholera here when I arrived July 19. Now there is," Page said. There is also a large and deadly outbreak of dysentery among the squatters.

Saforon Bidaniene, a 30-year-old squatter, died of dysentery Wednesday. The volunteers who picked up his body said five or six die each day and the number is growing.

"These people are supposed to be in a camp," said Page. Unless the refugees are relocated in proper camps, Page said, the deaths from dysentery and cholera would become an epidemic.

"Feeding them here is the best way to have them die, along with the local population, and we are not going to do it," Page said.

Israeli outposts attacked

Muslim guerrillas attacked Israeli troops and allied militiamen in south Lebanon with mortars and armor-piercing rockets today.

3 guerillas slain in clash with Israelis

MARIJAYOUN, Lebanon (AP) — Muslim guerrillas infiltrated Israeli-held land in southern Lebanon Thursday and wounded two Israeli soldiers with a roadside bomb, security sources said.

Three guerrillas were killed in an ensuing clash.

The guerrillas planted the bomb on the main road to the border town of Naqura and detonated it by remote control before attacking an Israeli army patrol with automatic rifles, the sources said on condition of anonymity.

The Israelis fired back, killing three guerrillas, the sources said.

Responsibility for the attack was claimed by the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, which opposes peace with Israel and has been fighting to evict the Israelis from southern Lebanon. The claim mentioned no guerrilla casualties. The afternoon hostilities followed Hezbollah attacks on Israeli troops and allied militiamen with mortars and armor-piercing rockets. Israel hit back with artillery and tank fire.

Security sources said the clashes flared throughout the morning at the Hamra crossing that links the western sector of the Israeli-occupied enclave to a U.N.-policed zone around Lebanon's southern port of Tyre.

Hezbollah struck at positions manned by Israeli troops and the allied South Lebanon Army near the crossing and adjacent Bayyada hill, the sources said.

Israeli and militia troops responded with howitzer and tank fire on the Shiite Muslim village of Mansouri, suspected of harboring Hezbollah guerrillas.

There was no casualty report from the guerrillas' initial attack. But in the retaliation against Mansouri, one civilian was wounded, the sources said.

The Hamra gateway overlooking the Mediterranean was closed by the Israeli army and even U.N. traffic was banned, the sources said.

Israel carved out the zone in 1985 as a buffer against guerrilla raids on northern Israeli towns.

'Honni' returns as modern virus

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — Germans thought Erich Honnecker was securely tucked away in history. But he's made a comeback — as a computer virus.

On Saturday, the 33rd anniversary of the building of the Berlin Wall, a likeness of the late East German leader popped up on thousands of computer screens in eastern and western Germany.

After the playing of the East German national anthem, computer programs were destroyed "by order of the DDR (East German) Council of Ministers."

"Honni's last revenge — I'll be back," was then displayed on screens.

Honni was the nickname given to the stem-looking Communist leader, who died in May in exile in Chile.

Computer viruses are instructions hidden in normal-looking programs that can destroy or alter data. Bochum GDATA company, which specializes in fighting viruses, hopes to have anti-Honnecker software by the end of the month.

Post-office officials begin new programs

TWIN FALLS — Post office officials have initiated a number of programs they say will improve service to Twin Falls customers.

Plans include repainting all 23 existing mail collection boxes and adding half a dozen more around town.

The retail lobby at the downtown post office will see some improvements as well, officials said. A second automated stamp-vending machine will join the existing one in late fall, and a self-service display of padded envelopes, tape and other retail items will arrive soon.

Acting Postmaster Eric Fielding said staffing changes at the office were made to ensure that all first-class mail addressed to Twin Falls post office boxes is delivered by 9:30 a.m. every day.

"We know that customers have choices for their personal communications. We plan to be more customer-oriented and change with the times," Fielding said.

Filer school registration for 1994-95 begins next week

FILER — Registration for the 1994-95 school year will take place Aug. 24 and 25, for students attending classes in Filer or Hollister schools.

Elementary and middle school students can register either day between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. at the school they will be attending.

High school students should register by the following schedule:

- Seniors, Aug. 25, 9 a.m. to noon.
- Juniors, Aug. 25, 1 to 4 p.m.
- Sophomores, Aug. 26, 9 a.m. to noon.
- Freshmen, Aug. 26, 1 to 4 p.m.

Some fees for high school students include $1 locker fee, $25 activity ticket and $30 for sports participation. Students new to the Filer School District must present a birth certificate and record of immunization before they will be permitted to register.

Further information can be obtained by calling the school district at 326-5981.

Dry conditions prompt police to crack down on motorists

TWIN FALLS — The extremely dry conditions and limited fire fighting resources in southern Idaho have prompted the Idaho State Police to crack down on motorists discarding lighted material out of their vehicles.

"It's hard for me to imagine that with the current fire situation that people wouldn't be more thoughtful about throwing cigarettes or other lighted materials from their car," said Superintendent Ronald Moore of the Idaho State Police. "But unfortunately some people have developed a habit of doing this and don't even think about it."

Such thoughtless acts can easily spark a fire that can result in devastating property loss, Moore said.

Throwing lighted material out of car windows is always a citable offense, Moore said, but because of the hazardous fire conditions, he has instructed his officers to be even more strict with citing offenders.

Offenders can face maximum penalties of 6 months in jail and a $1,000 fine. Civil action seeking recovery of property damages is also possible.

"A thoughtless act could literally cost you millions of dollars and Idahoans thousands of acres of forest or rangeland," Moore said.

BPA decides against raising wholesale electricity rates

WASHINGTON — The Bonneville Power Administration decided Thursday against raising wholesale electricity rates this year but officials said they expect an increase next year if severe drought continues.

Randall Hardy, the federal power marketing agency's administrator, told House Speaker Tom Foley, D-Wash., there will be no rate increase despite a third year of severe drought throughout the Columbia River basin.

He said a rate hike was averted mostly because of new federal assistance to help save Northwest salmon species faced with extinction.

President Clinton also had pledged an estimated $40 million to $60 million to cover the cost of hydropower loss during a spring experiment to spill migrating juvenile salmon over dams.

Ex-teacher admits having sex with students

By Virginia S. Garber
Times-News writer

GOODING — A former Wendell teacher brought his trial to an abrupt end Wednesday when he pleaded guilty to five counts of statutory rape — before any trial witnesses took the stand.

Wednesday was the second day of trial for David Dean Bowen, 37, who changed his plea after attorneys for both sides gave opening arguments, said Gooding County Prosecuting Attorney Philip A. Brown.

Bowen faced eight counts of statutory rape of two former students; three counts were dismissed in exchange for his guilty plea, Brown said.

A presentencing investigation was ordered, but a sentencing date for Bowen has not been set, Brown said.

Brown said Bowen's wife, Connie Bowen, also will appear in court on a charge of intimidating a witness — one of the young victims — during her husband's May 29 preliminary hearing.

David Bowen was originally charged with sexual battery of a 17-year-old female student at Wendell High School. He was charged after the girl's father caught them in a hotel room last year, Brown said in December 1993.

The girl confessed to an affair with the teacher that had begun before she turned 18, Brown said. She later alleged she and Bowen had an affair between Oct. 2, 1993, and Nov. 28, 1993, according to prosecution documents filed in 5th District Magistrate Court.

Bowen pleaded guilty this week to four counts of raping the Wendell girl.

The second girl was 16 when Bowen had intercourse with her in the summer of 1992, Brown said. The girl was a student of Bowen's when he was a teacher in the Jerome School District in the 1991-92 school year.

Bowen pleaded guilty to only one count of raping the Jerome girl.

Bowen taught physics and chemistry at Wendell Junior-Senior High School and resigned his position in December 1993 when the sexual battery charge was filed.

A visit by Dial-A-Break volunteer George Aufdenkamp, left, provides company for Wendell Watson while allowing Martael Watson an opportunity to leave their home.

Helping hands

Dial-A-Break service gives in-home care givers a breather

By Julie M. McKinnon
Times-News writer

BUHL — After having a second stroke in April, Wendell Watson spent five weeks in the Twin Falls Care Center. During that time, his wife of 55 years spent her days with him and then took care of the work at their Buhl home, just as she had been doing since Watson's first stroke in January 1993.

"She took care of everything, the irrigation and everything, and then she was in at 7 o'clock in the morning. I don't know how she did it," said 75-year-old Watson, who is confined to a wheelchair and has a crippling muscular disease.

So to make sure Martael Watson now has a few hours a week to relax without worrying about him, Wendell Watson insisted his wife get relief from a new Idaho Office on Aging service called Dial-A-Break.

"She needed to get out," Wendell Watson said. "She needs to slow up a little."

But her husband's health kept her housebound.

"She's been held down, scared to go," he said.

Administered through the Retired and Senior Volunteer Program at the College of Southern Idaho, Dial-A-Break gives in-home primary care-givers a chance to get away from their chores for two to four hours a week or twice a month.

In July, the first month the program operated, volunteers in the eight-county area logged 65 hours with people who needed companionship — and someone to get help in an emergency — but not physical care, said program director Judy Tipton.

The service is state funded for a year; in December, it will be assessed to see if it saves the state Medicaid dollars by allowing people to stay at home, Tipton said. If that is accomplished, then the budget for the service will be increased, and volunteers will get reimbursed for mileage, she said.

Tipton said she wants to have volunteers throughout the eight-county area so anyone who may need the service has access to volunteers with whom they can build friendships. Fees for the service are based on household income.

"We're there to reach every little town," Tipton said. "We could use as many volunteers as we can get. We don't want to 'burn out' our volunteers. We want them to have plenty left for their families."

Anyone who would like to volunteer for the service or get more information can call Tipton at 736-2122, Claudia Loomis at 543-5815 or Jean Boling at 829-5620.

While Joe Wasko of Buhl spent a few hours chatting with Wendell Watson last week, Martael Watson continued a tradition her mother started by going to lunch with her daughter, Jo Anne Gooding of Twin Falls, on her birthday. Gooding's 14-year-old daughter, Rachel, also went along.

Then on Thursday, George Aufdenkamp of Buhl and Wendell Watson visited while Martael Watson had lunch with her daughter, poked around a few shops and went to the library.

Martael Watson said the service also helps volunteers, some of whom are widowed or alone.

"This is great for the ones who come in because they need to be needed," she said.

Council approves Norwood as new Hagerman mayor

By Terrell Williams
Times-News correspondent

HAGERMAN — The new mayor is a retired Marine, born and raised in Hagerman. Jim Norwood, 62, was sworn in Tuesday after the city's four council members approved him unanimously.

"He has basic, plain old common sense and he wants to learn," council President Amberg service said Thursday. "He's a good person and he's well respected."

Norwood, a graduate of Hagerman High School, retired in 1974 after 23 years in the U.S. Marine Corps. He said he expects his new job to be a challenge, but he is anxious to go to work.

"I've lived here a long time, and it just seemed like a good chance to try and give something back," he said. "I've always liked Hagerman. It's been a good community. It's been good to me."

Norwood predicted his biggest challenge will be to ensure the new city water system is completed without problems. Small towns everywhere now have to deal with state and federal government mandates that sometimes are more expensive than limited city budgets can handle, he said.

"Hopefully, we can get over it," he said.

Meanwhile, the new mayor said he hopes his administrative experience in the military will help him to run the city government smoothly. He said he has no immediate plans to start any new projects.

"Before we take on anything new, I really feel we're going to have to finish up Idaho's next already been started," Norwood said.

Arterburn said she was impressed with Norwood last year when she asked him to sign her petition to run for a council seat. Before he would sign, she recalled, he asked her numerous intelligent and thought-provoking questions.

"I knew then that he was concerned about the city and where it was going," Arterburn said. "He was trying to be careful about who he supported to go into the city office. So my opinion was, he was an excellent person for the mayor's position."

In another matter, the City Council voted to raise monthly water and sewer rates, effective sometime in October, Arterburn predicted. The water rate, now $11, will be increased to $15 per hookup. The sewer rate, now $11, will be $17. Arterburn said the additional city revenue will help pay for maintenance of the water and sewer systems.

Lance to violent criminals: '3 strikes, you're dead'

By Frank E. Lockwood
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Republican Attorney General candidate Al Lance is advocating a "three strikes, you're out" policy for violent criminals and a "three strikes, you're dead" policy for child sex offenders.

Lance, 45, who faces Democrat Mike Burdett on the November ballot, says it's time to crack down on Idaho's most violent lawbreakers. Under his proposals, many three-time felons would face life in prison without parole, and "three strikes, you're dead" would apply to major drug traffickers who get a life sentence after just two convictions. Pedophiles who are convicted three times of molesting children would get the death penalty.

In Twin Falls Thursday, Lance also praised boot camps for juvenile offenders and laws to keep dangerous sexual predators locked up even after their prison terms end. A similar law in Washington state allows authorities to civilly commit predators who pose a threat to society. If the courts uphold the Washington law, Lance supports similar legislation.

"A three-strikes-you're out" ballot measure in Washington captured 72 percent of the vote in 1993, Lance noted. And 20 city states are currently considering similar legislation.

"It has popular appeal with the populace," Lance said.

The Republican also embraces capital punishment. "You have to have an effective death penalty in place," he said. Blaming the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco for a "backlog of inmates on Death Row," Lance said Idaho's next attorney general should "continue to push and push and push those appeals as appropriate."

Lance's proposal to execute sex offenders would face a host of legal challenges. The Supreme Court has previously ruled that capital punishment for rape amounts to unconstitutional cruel and unusual punishment.

But Lance isn't deterred. "Possibly the time has come that we need to challenge some of these older, more liberal, Warren court rulings because most Idahoans, in my opinion, would support that," he said.

As attorney general, Lance said he'll re-evaluate how the state spends its justice budget. He'll also examine alternatives to prison for non-violent criminals.

"The individual that's going to do your kids and my kids harm," Lance said, "is the violent offender and not the individual that kites checks."

A two-term state representative and a Meridian lawyer since 1976, Lance has served on the judiciary rules and administration committee. He's currently majority caucus chairman in the state House of Representatives.

While Lance advocates a tough-on-crime approach, he doesn't want to criminalize abortion. He also opposes taxpayer-funded abortions. When it comes to procreation, Lance says, "Keep government out of it."

Conservationists ask for halt to all mining in upper Salmon

By William Brock
Times-News writer

STANLEY Conservationists are asking leaders of the Salmon-Challis National Forest and the National Marine Fisheries Service to call an immediate halt to all mine expansion, development, exploration and mineral patenting in the upper Salmon River drainage.

In an effort to protect Idaho's imperiled steelhead and salmon, the Idaho Conservation League, the Boulder-White Clouds Council and the Idaho Watersheds Project requested the moratorium in a letter earlier this week.

"We believe it is illegal to allow mining activities to continue, and especially to expand" until in-depth biological assessments for the area are completed, they wrote. Once the assessments are written, reviewed and approved, the moratorium should be lifted.

The ban is necessary, they added, because of the "increasing pace of mineral activity, a pattern of less federal oversight, and the imminent threat of (mineral) patenting which will reduce oversight further."

The three conservation groups are not seeking to stop current mining activities in the Yankee Fork Ranger District. Instead, they are hoping to halt future mining operations until environmental problems—such as toxic pollution and stream sedimentation—are brought under control, said Lynne Stone, of the Boulder-White Clouds Council.

New student numbers cause concern

The Times-News

JEROME — The number of new students registering has caused the School Board concern that an anticipated improvement in student-teacher ratios could be eroded or disappear.

Registration started in Jerome area schools Monday.

The board approved the final plans for the proposed $560,000 Vo Ag Technical Center, presented to the

But Charles Wildes, acting supervisor of the Salmon-Challis Forest, said he doesn't have the authority to close off an area for future mining. Further, water quality from mines in the upper Salmon River drainage is well within federal standards, Wildes said.

"That's some of the cleanest water in the system," he said, adding that the mines have been drenched by heavy storms this year — and no toxic spills have occurred.

Mike White, corporate attorney for the Hecla Mining Co., echoed Wildes' assessment. "White's firm is in the final stages of a major expansion of its Grubbs Creek mine above the Yankee-Fork of the Salmon River."

"We don't see any need to block off areas of Idaho to mineral development," White said. Current environmental oversight is adequate, he said.

But Stone, in a telephone interview, begged to differ. She said Uncle Sam's environmental vigilance in the Yankee Fork region is inadequate.

"We think the salmon are greatly at risk and we're on a collision course with sedimentation, toxic materials and the 'forever' effects of mining," she said.

For those reasons, Idaho conservation groups "don't want to see another open pit mine in the Yankee Fork," Stone said. In a related development, the Idaho Department of Fish and Game reported Thursday that only one sockeye salmon has found its way to Redfish Lake this year. Decades ago, thousands of salmon migrated to the lake every summer — giving Redfish Lake its name.

In addition to water quality problems, anglers, predators, hydroelectric facilities, and slacks pools of warm water backed up behind dams threaten migrating salmon.

In their request for a moratorium, the conservation groups said there is already a lot of mining activity in the upper Snake River drainage.

"Separately and cumulatively, these projects are degrading the watersheds," they wrote. "Separately and cumulatively, these projects risk far more serious degradation."

The moratorium request cited a 1992 biological assessment prepared by the Challis National Forest. "In the not too distant future... human caused disturbance from mining and other activities in the area may far exceed its carrying capacity."

The letter also cited a March, 1993, letter from Idaho's Division of Environmental Quality to the Challis Forest.

"There is an imminent and substantial danger to the public health or environment from Preacher's Cove Cyanide Mine," state environmental officials wrote.

"There is a substantial likelihood that a surface discharge of contaminated cyanide solution from Preacher's Cove could reach the Yankee Fork and cause significant damage to the natural resources of the river."

Superintendent Jim Cobble announced he will be sitting on the new "Criminal Justice Task Force."

The concepts he will be working with include early intervention, curfews, and work release programs instead of jail.

School involved ten teachers and two hundred and fifty eighth students.

Ten IBM computers arrived to equip the new computer room at Central Elementary, but without keyboards.

2-truck collision causes injuries, fires

RUPERT — Two trucks collided and burst into flames on Baseline Road Wednesday.

Leo Robert Maier, 54, of Rupert, and Celso Gomez Rios, 30, of Burley, were treated and released at Minidoka Memorial Hospital.

Maier was turning left at the intersection of Baseline and East 600 roads at 6:30 p.m. when he was hit on his passenger side by Rios's westbound truck, according to an accident report.

Both vehicles ran off the road and caught fire. Rios was thrown from his truck when it overturned by the roadside. Maier was wearing shoulder and lap belts, the report said.

Rios' truck partly burned; Maier's truck was destroyed by fire. East End Fire Department responded to the scene, the report said.

Maier was cited for running a stop sign, the report said.

Commissioners warn of smelly waste

RUPERT — Minidoka County Planning and Zoning commissioners will explore ways to warn rural residents of potentially odorous waste ponds that are planned for development.

Commissioners Wednesday gave the go-ahead to Paul Aston, the county building and zoning supervisor, to research ways to make waste pond developers apply for a special-use zoning permit, meet state Division of Environmental Quality standards and go through a public process.

The proposal will take several months of study, Aston said: It must avoid unfairly limiting the small farmer who buries his potato waste underground, he said.

Last month, residents protested the smell of an open waste pond north of Paul, owned by Magic Valley Foods Inc., of Rupert. John Stevenson, a commission member, said he has heard that the company has since controlled the odor.

Tourism could change quality of life

OAKLEY — Without proper planning, an influx of tourism businesses around the City of Rocks National Reserve could change the quality of small town life for the worse, planners say.

Utah State University plans public hearings in Oakley and Malta on how to keep a balance between both sides.

The Oakley meeting starts at 8 p.m., Aug. 30, at the Howell Opera House. The Malta meeting starts at 8 p.m., Aug. 31, at the Ratt River High School auditorium.

Last year, the National Park Service proposed a Cassia County History Tour for visitors, which would promote landmark homes and scenic views that accent the historical ambience of the area, according to a Cassia County commission news release.

The tour would follow State Highway 77 south through Albion to Elba, Almo and Oakley in southern Cassia County.

University graduate students have been documenting aspects of the local communities that give each one its unique personality, the release said.

Planners are seeking public comment on changes that would be unacceptable to them and possible ways to deal with the future growth of tourism business.

For more information, call the Cassia County commissioners' office at 678-7302.

House OKs new management plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — A unique government corporation to operate and maintain San Francisco's Presidio Army base as a national park would be established under legislation the House passed Thursday.

In a 245-168 vote, the House approved creation of the Presidio Trust, a public benefit government corporation that would operate within the Interior Department. The Senate has not acted on the bill.

The trust would manage the leasing, maintenance, rehabilitation, repair and improvement of Presidio buildings so they can be used for park rather than Army purposes.

The trust is necessary because the National Park Service doesn't have experience managing a site with such a large array of buildings, housing and other facilities, the bill's sponsors said.

Judge orders molester to serve term

ORION, Ind. (AP) — A District Court judge has rejected the recommendation of state corrections officials and ordered convicted child molester Dale Holon to serve at least five years in prison.

Judge George Reinhardt's decision ended a four-year campaign by his victim, Amberly Holon, and her stepfather to block incarceration.

Holon, who had pleaded guilty to sexually molesting Terri Holon four years ago when she was only 9 years old, went openly when Reinhardt ordered him to serve at least five years of a maximum 10-year sentence before being eligible for parole.

Reinhardt had originally retained jurisdiction over Holon after imposing the sentence to see how Holon did during the six-month stint at the minimum-security prison camp in Coffeywood. The facility's review team argued that Holon was a candidate for probation when he completed that six-month term this summer.

But in response to that recommendation, Terri Holon, who had to demand that the prosecutor press the case against Holon, and stepfather Robert Holon put up a paper's firestorm in the region warner that a child molester was being released.

Navy agrees to stop bombing

ABERDEEN, Wash. (AP) — The Navy has agreed to halt bombing exercises in and around a marine sanctuary off the coast of Washington state until it can consult federal fish experts about potential damage to North-salmon species.

Admiral Henry F. Henshaw agreed all military operations on the Navy bombing range off the Olympic Peninsula will be stopped immediately, Washington Democratic Rep. Norm Dicks and Jolene Unselod said.

"Herrera," a commander of Submarine Group 9 at Bangor in Puget Sound, "has informed us that the use of the bombing range — which is under his command's jurisdiction — will be curtailed immediately and that the Navy will begin consultation with the National Marine Fisheries Service to determine any potential impact on salmon," Dicks said Wednesday.

The practice runs with 500-pound cluster bombs had the potential to damage chinook salmon and other protected species migrating to the Snake River, officials for the National Marine Fisheries Service said.

"Coastal fishermen have seen the entire coast closed for salmon fishing," Unselod said.

"They are naturally pretty concerned if already-threatened salmon are further assaulted by bombing practices as they return down the coast to their natal rivers," she said.

Until Tuesday, a fighter squadron from Mober Air Force base had been dropping the bombs in a designated Navy bombing area off the coast of Grays Harbor. Navy fighters were assisting.

A map released by the Navy shows that three-fourths of the long-established bombing area off Grays Harbor is within the newly created Olympic Coast National Marine Sanctuary.

Detective at scene racist, Simpson attorneys say

LOS ANGELES (AP) — O.J. Simpson's lawyers filed a motion Thursday claiming the police detective who found a bloody glove at Simpson's home is an avowed racist.

Arguing that Detective Mark Fuhrman has "a propensity to create false information against African-American defendants," the defense team demanded access to his police personnel records, including psychiatric reports.

The motion also seeks internal documents detailing any infractions by three other detectives assigned to the double murder case.

Simpson's lawyer, Robert Shapiro, said race would not be a trial issue, but the documents filed by defense lawyer Carl Douglas indicate otherwise.

They suggest Fuhrman planted a bloody glove at Simpson's home after the bodies of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman were discovered.

Simpson was ordered to stand trial on murder charges on the basis of evidence including two bloody gloves, one found at the crime scene and the other at Simpson's home.

"The credibility of the first detectives arriving at the crime scene who gathered much of the early evidence against him is a central issue in Mr. Simpson's defense," the motion said.

Fuhrman attorney Robert Tourtelot was not immediately available for comment on the motion.

The motion cited preliminary hearing testimony in which Fuhrman appeared to refer to more than one glove at the crime scene. Asked about the location of a left-handed brown leather glove, the transcript showed his response was:

"There's an iron fence and through that iron fence you can get very close to the male victim. And looking there, I could see them down at his feet. The word 'them' was underlined in the motion.

Attached to the motion was a sworn declaration by a woman identified as Kathleen Bell who said Fuhrman showed his allegedly racist beliefs during a mid-1980s discussion in which he said he'd stop any vehicle

New suits over shootout target federal agents

BOISE (AP) — Attorneys for white separatist Randy Weaver, his children and Kevin Harris have filed lawsuits seeking more than $180 million damages from federal agents that took part in a shootout that resulted in three deaths.

Weaver and Harris earlier this month filed notice of tort claims against the federal government. The U.S. District Court lawsuits filed Wednesday seeks payment from individual U.S. marshals, FBI agents and their supervisors. It also lists 35 "John Does," or unnamed agents of the FBI, marshal's service or the Department of Justice.

Deputy U.S. Marshal William Degani, Quincy, Mass., was killed two years ago when he and other federal agents got into a shootout with Harris and Weaver family members at the Weaver cabin on a mountain in the Snake River northern Idaho. Samuel Weaver, 14, was killed in the exchange of gunfire.

Federal agents surrounded the cabin. One day later, a federal sniper, Lon Horiuchi, testified he fired a shot at Harris that killed Vicki Weaver, Randy Weaver's wife.

New lawsuits were filed on behalf of Harris and Weaver and Weaver's three children: Sara, Rachel and Elisabeth.

This lawsuit complains about them trying to kill Kevin ... then lying about who was the aggressor and then shooting Kevin and trying to kill him," said Harris attorney David Nevin. Harris was wounded by the same bullet that killed Vicki Weaver.

Harris seeks more than $10 million damages from 12 federal agents, including Horiuchi.

Charles Peterson, Boise attorney for Weaver and his family, said, "This is against the individuals." He said the lawsuit seeks $170,000,000 damages.

Peterson said the family has the benefit of testimony in last year's criminal trial of Weaver and Harris. They were charged with murder and other crimes but Harris was freed by a federal court jury and Weaver convicted only of minor charges.

He was released from jail late last year and returned with his daughters to Iowa.

"That's a great luxury here because Lon Horiuchi can't change his story. He said, 'I was aiming at Kevin Harris and I tried to kill him.' He can't come in now and claim it was an accident."

Horiuchi testified he shot at Harris, who was outside the cabin, brandishing a rifle at a time when a federal helicopter was flying around.

The wounded Harris surrendered 10 days into a standoff with an army of federal agents and Weaver and his daughters gave up the next day.

The U.S. Department of Justice conducted an internal investigation of its handling of the Weaver case, but hasn't released it yet.

Library keeps watercolor locked away

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Jerriann Sablin's controversial watercolor, "Set Aside," went on display at the Idaho Falls Library this week, but locked up in a separate room away from other paintings in a traveling exhibit.

People can see the work of the Blackfoot artist, but they have to ask for a key to the locked room. The theme of the painting is Sablin's estrangement from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It shows three views of her, nude and bound to a straight-backed chair. In one panel she is gagged in another she is blindfolded, and in the center three men without faces in conservative suits and ties are performing a laying on of hands.

Ginger Kramer, representative of a watercolor society, said the painting has artistic merit, and if the show had been in a private gallery, there would be no problem. But she said since it's the public library, library officials wanted to be careful.

"(The) subject matter could be offensive to some people in this area," she said. "We thought there would be problems if we hung it out in the open with the rest of the exhibit."

The painting was pulled from an exhibit when it was hung earlier this year in Boise Cascade corporate headquarters in Boise. There were only a few complaints, but they came from people who were influential at Boise Cascade, said Idaho Watercolor Society past president Ed Labadie.

Labadie said he didn't have a problem with the painting being isolated.

"We are a guest everywhere we appear," he said. "It's their personal call, and we honor that. Yes, it is censorship, and it's unfortunate, but it's a touchy issue with no clear right or wrong."

The exhibit was hung in a private gallery in Twin Falls in July, and is scheduled to be shown in October at Idaho State University.

Sablin, who is in Ireland, could not be reached for comment, but her husband, Ralph Thruway, said he thinks people may be overreacting. "I don't presume to speak for her, but I know she didn't intend to be antagonistic," he said. The painting has been shown before in Pocatello without adverse comment.

Larry Sparks and Doug Sandidge, both of the 28th Military Airlift Squadron Historical Association, helped restore this C-124 cargo plane.

Hill museum features huge cargo airplane

HILL AIR FORCE BASE, Utah (AP) — Aircraft parts that were scattered across the back lot of the Hill Aerospace Museum two years ago now have been assembled into a C-124.

The jigsaw puzzle-like restoration was completed just in time for next month's reunion of Hill's former 28th Military Airlift Squadron, which flew the huge cargo plane known as "Old Shaky."

The restored aircraft is the pride and joy of three local men who have nostalgic memories of the time they spent in the aircraft.

The trio, former loadmasters Doug Sandidge and Jack Holmes, and former navigator Larry Sparks, have closely followed the restoration process.

"I cried the first time I saw the cockpit ... and to see where we used to play pinocle. It was so dirty," Sandidge said.

The cockpit still is not in polished condition, but "we're working on trying to find equipment panels and seats for it," he added.

Sandidge said one source they're trying to track down is a private owner in Las Vegas who has a C-124 he wants to turn into a restaurant.

The plane's numerous parts were brought to Utah aboard several C-5s from Aberdeen Proving Ground in Maryland, where the plane had lay rusting among the weeds since the early 1970s. It also had been gutted for another C-124 restoration job, Sandidge said.

The actual restoration work was done by the 405th Combat Logistics Support Squadron at Hill.

Museum director John McCleary said the C-124 once was assigned to Hill's 28th MAS, which operated out of the base from 1953 to 1969, when it was deactivated.

"Few people know it, but the squadron's primary mission was the airlift of atomic weapons," said Holmes, noting that the one-secert information has now been declassified.

The plane was loud, and you can just guess where it got its name "Old Shaky," from said Holmes.

"It was also called the aluminum overcoat because of its huge size. Like the bumblebee, no one ever believed it would fly," Sparks said.

"I never thought I'd be up in one of these again," said Sandidge as he walked through the restored plane last week. "It's not too pretty in here right now ... but at least you get the idea of its size," he said.

The Sandidge and Sparks are hoping they can arrange to hold the upcoming MAS reunion uncheon inside the plane's vast interior. The pair said the response to the reunion, which will be Sept. 2-5, has been good from out-of-state former 28th MAS members but "lacking" from the long list of local members.

The squadron was established during World War II and was involved in transporting men and equipment to Africa, Italy, Yugoslavia, Albania and Greece.

It was deactivated in 1965, then reactivated in 1983 at Hill. As part of the Military Airlift Command, it provided airlift support to units involved in the Cuban Missile Crisis and was involved in airlift operations to South Vietnam.

District sells note to raise extra cash

SANDPOINT (AP) — The Bonner County School District has broken in June that it sold a promissory note to move that cost the district $63,000 in interest.

Some district trustees say they thought the loss in potential interest income was only $22,000.

"I don't understand why they would sell at a discount," Trustee William A. Damron said. "I'm afraid there was no good reason for it other than it was done so the budget deficit wouldn't look so bad."

Four former trustees had bragged about ridding the district of a $500,000 budget deficit. At a budget hearing in June, they even said the district had a $281,000 surplus.

But weeks before the trustees were slated to leave office, school district watchdogs went to Bonner County.

They discovered the district actually was in the red about $350,000. The deficit would have climbed past $500,000 if a promissory note involving wasn't sold back to the developer who gave it to the district.

Ivan Lippi, who owns Sandpoint Title Co., bought the building in 1986, giving a note for it. At a special meeting July 27, trustees agreed to sell the note back to Lippi for about $330,000. If the district had held onto the note for another year, Lippi would have had to pay an additional $63,628.

Former board chairman Ford Elsass said the current board is adding interest that would have been earned only if the note was sold at a discount.

"You don't calculate unearned interest on a note when you sell it, that's not how it's done," Elsass said.

Brent Baker, the only school board member who kept his seat, said the district was in debt and needed a note, but he understood the discount was only $22,000, not $63,000. He didn't vote on the deal. He has a construction company and often does business with Lippi.

Legally blind, handicapped man faces criminal charges

MOUNTAIN HOME (AP) — A 69-year-old Mountain Home man who is legally blind and has trouble walking faces criminal charges that he engaged in sexual activities with 12-year-old girls.

But Clint Johnston said Wednesday he could not see how old the girls were and that they were the aggressors. He said they came to his home uninvited after the three had engaged in telephone sex for several months.

Although the girls did not threaten Johnston, he said he feared, "If I hadn't done what they said, they would have hit me in the head, because I couldn't see them."

Johnston faces two counts of lewd conduct with a minor under 18 for allegedly fondling the girls. He could be sentenced to life in prison if convicted, but remained free without bail on Wednesday.

While some observers contend Johnston is a victim of misplaced prosecution, authorities say they moved to protect the community and get help for the girls.

"The law says people who are adults are not to have sexual contact with children under 16," Elmore County Prosecutor Barbara Layher said.

"How can they do something like this to blind and handicapped man?" asked Barbara Moseng, who helps care for Johnston.

Elmore County Sheriff's Detective Tom Berry disputes Johnston's contention that he did not know the girls were so young, but he said he would recommend that Johnston receive probation if he is convicted.

Berry said the incident with the girls was consensual and there would be no crime had they been 18, but they should not be subjected to such contact.

"The defense and prosecution are disputing whether Johnston is mentally competent to stand trial. He will be examined by a psychologist, and he could be institutionalized if he is found unfit to aid in his own defense."

Allegations damage reputation

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A Coeur d'Alene builder contends mounting allegations of unfinished and shoddy work have been blown out of proportion and have unfairly damaged his reputation.

But some northern Idaho building officials and the attorney general's office said Ron Stratton has only himself to blame for image problems.

As many as 25 active complaints against Stratton Construction are being investigated in Kootenai, Bonner and Benewah counties, Rick Uveling of the state Department of Labor and Industrial Services said Wednesday.

"We're proceeding with a full-blown investigation," said Deputy Attorney General Brett DeLange of the attorney general's Consumer Protection Division.

DeLange said Stratton has not responded to repeated requests by the attorney general's office to address the problems. But Stratton said he has been consulting with an attorney.

Woman dies after shooting

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — An Idaho Falls woman died and her niece was hospitalized with a gunshot wound after a shooting Wednesday night at an Idaho Falls apartment.

Police said Michael Clements, 43, Blackfoot, surrendered to police a couple of hours later near his home five miles southwest of Blackfoot. Police said Clements was involved in a high-speed chase that reached speeds up to 90 mph.

After he stopped, Clements held a gun to his head and threatened suicide while police negotiated with him, officers said, before the man surrendered.

Mary Ellen Johnson, 35, died of two gunshot wounds early Thursday at an Idaho Falls hospital.

Ann Blackwell, 58, was listed in serious but stable condition at Eastern Idaho Regional Medical Center. Officers said she was struck by a single bullet which went through her chest.

Neighbors and police said Oakes was Clements' former girlfriend. At the time of the shooting, she was packing her belongings at her apartment with the intent to move to Colorado.

Johnson, Oakes' aunt, was helping her pack when the shootings occurred.

Bonneville County Prosecutor David Johnson on Thursday filed charges of first-degree murder, aggravated battery, burglary and sentence enhancement counts of using firearms to commit murder and kidnapping.

Clements made an initial court appearance Thursday afternoon before Magistrate Linda Cook and asked for a public defender. The magistrate denied the request for now, based on the fact Clements had income, but said she would review it.

A preliminary hearing was set for next Tuesday at 1:30 p.m. Clements was ordered held without bond.

Tyler Moore, who lives next door to Oakes' apartment, was in the backyard working on a truck when he heard the shooting. He said he knew instantly what had happened because Clements and Oakes had been in several recent fights.

Mystic Machines

ANDY ARENZ/The Times-News

Motorcyclists roll into town for this weekend's rally

By Virginia S. Garber
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Slick modern machines didn't prove enough of a challenge for Temple Baldwin's tool-happy 11-year-old son, so Baldwin tried giving him an old motorcycle to take apart.

Exploring its mysteries kept the boy happy for days. Now, old motorcycles have become a passion for both father and son, and Baldwin's antique machines are some of the most ancient in the Idaho Vintage Motorcycle Club, a group with members in surrounding states as well.

His 1913 Indian is a landmark model — it was manufactured the first year Indian offered a model with more than one speed. Before 1913, motorcycle riders had to pedal to help their machines uphill, Baldwin said.

Baldwin's collection of old-time wheels also includes a 1914 Excelsior motorcycle made by Schwinn and a 1962 Cushman Eagle motor scooter. Some of his antique machines will appear in a Twin Falls show this weekend sponsored by the motorcycle club.

The free show in City Park will feature vintage racers, road models, dirt bikes and bicycles — some restored, and others looking their age — said club president Brian Renstrom of Boise. This weekend's gathering is the club's 16th rally in Twin Falls, and Renstrom encourages anyone with an old bike to bring it out for the rally.

Vintage rally, ride, show

Classic and antique motorcycles enthusiasts roll into town this weekend for a rally, ride and show of vintage machines.

Sponsored by the Idaho Vintage Motorcycle Club, the rally and show feature bikes from as early as 1910. The rally begins Saturday at 2 p.m. in City Park, and a group ride roars off at 3 p.m. A banquet at 6 p.m. at George K's Restaurant is followed by a slide show on "100 Years of Motorcycling."

At Sunday's 11 a.m. show in City Park, the public is invited to vote for favorite machines, and trophies are presented at 4 p.m.

Richard Renstrom of Caldwell will turn out with his rare 1939 Velocette from England.

"It's a chance for us all to get together and take notes," said Ed Hoxie of Twin Falls, a club member. "I don't know anyone who doesn't like to ride a motorcycle."

Hoxie's nine antique motorcycles were all in pieces Wednesday for painting and repair, but he hoped to have many of them ready for the weekend's festivities.

His 1970 Harley-Davidson "74" and a 1955 Harley Hummer will make an appearance with matching paint jobs — "like father and son," Hoxie said.

A 1948 Indian Chief is the oldest in the collection he's been building for 30 years, and his 1965 Bridgestone "90," a Japanese machine, is one of the more unusual.

His passion for motorcycles is a long-standing one. His first bike was a 1939 Henderson three-wheeler, but he's been a Harley rider since he was 14 years old, he said. Like other collectors in the club, Hoxie sands, paints and repairs his treasured machines and "chromes up the rusty parts."

"The aim is to make it a beautiful bike," he said. But for motorcycles made before 1915, unrestored machines have a greater collector value because their authenticity isn't disputed, Baldwin said.

Machines displayed in this weekend's show must be "reasonably original," though sometimes restorers have to make authentic-looking parts, Hoxie said. No "choppers" with altered frames are welcome.

To be licensed by Idaho as "vintage," a motorcycle must be at least 30 years old, but the club welcomes anything 10 years or older in its shows, he said.

Saturday's schedule includes a group ride, but Hoxie said most collectors get only one machine running for the ride and avoid putting gasoline into their show bikes.

Magic Valley's meanest trucks head for the mud

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

JEROME — After investing thousands of dollars in his Jeep funny-car with its 496-cubic-inch, alcohol-burning engine, Jerry Carlile spent a more few bucks on a power nozzle.

"If you don't have one, you can spend a fortune in the car wash."

Carlile should know. On a half dozen weekends or more each summer, he runs his dream machine through a real big mud puddle — just as fast as he can.

"I was in drag racing for years, until it just got too expensive," said Carlile, who runs Western Custom Truck in Twin Falls. "But you have a pretty idea when you take off in a drag race what's going to happen. In mud racing, you have no idea where you're going."

Very quickly, mud racing is coming up on a the outside as a contender for The Next Big Sport. Its origins are in the red-clay of Dixie, where for generations, "Dukes of Hazard"-style, owners of muscle cars who weren't too particular about the wax job competed head to head on oval tracks.

The sport has long since evolved into a time-trial format, and found a national audience through The Nashville Network.

styles, their songs comment on current affairs, such as AIDS and Idaho's natural resources, and mock big-city life, vocalist and rhythm guitarist Craig Meyers said.

Other band members are Tim East on piano, John Gibson on lead guitar, Sean Chamberland on bass and Larry Drussel on drums.

• Today at 6:30 p.m., Whitewater's four songwriter-musicians give bluegrass an "authentic Idaho sound," blending the old and the new in country, blues, gospel, string band music and fiddle tunes with Idaho lyrics.

• Today at 8 p.m., Northern Angels band members infuse their rock 'n' roll with folk flavor by performing only original tunes. A combination of light rock, folk and contemporary with banjo and 12-string guitar.

Whitewater matches traditional numbers, such as "The Orange Blossom Special" and "Black Mountain Rag," with inventive tunes displaying their own love for Idaho's special attractions — like "Something about the Arco Desert" and "Rupert's Inner Tube."

• Today at 8 p.m., Mumbo Gumbo serves up a spicy stew of Gulf Coast musical influences — zydeco, second-line rhythm 'n' blues, Tex-Mex, boogie-woogie and Latin and African rhythms.

This seven-piece band features red-hot vocals, accordion; washboard; swamp guitar, boogie piano, a rock-solid rhythm section and saxophone. A variety of percussion instruments flavor its New Orleans

The Gem State Mud Racing Association will sponsor Mud Races Saturday and Sunday at the Jerome County Fairgrounds arena.

Saturday's show is scheduled for 6 p.m. and Sunday's at 1 p.m. Ticket prices are $8.50 for adults and $4 for youngsters older than 6. Tickets are available at Action Auto Parts, Bill's Antiques & Muffler and Bernard's Pizza in Twin Falls.

salsa mix and drive Mumbo Gumbo's lively dance beats.

• Saturday at 11 a.m., students from the College of Southern Idaho's summer musical workshop, "Make a Joyful Noise," perform vocal and instrumental selections.

Under the direction of Jud Upham and Dee Street of Out of the Wood Productions, 25 students from 10 to 13 years old set keyboard, drums, saxophone, trumpet and clarinet to singing.

• Saturday at 11:40 a.m., the Locals Program features California's Patty Parsons and Oregon native Nancy Mooney.

With clear, refined tones and magnetic stage presence, Parsons sings everything from folk to funk, Duke Ellington to Oscar Hammerstein II.

Passengers with too many carry-on bags should be carried off

DEAR ABBY: Three cheers for "Irritated in Seattle" — the flight attendant who complained about passengers with excess carry-on luggage. These people are a real pain to other passengers.

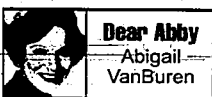

I've had to stand in the aisle of a packed plane with dozens of passengers standing in line behind me while some bozo searches for enough overhead space to store hanging bags, giant backpacks, car seats, flight attendants, etc. Once I reach my seat, I get knocked in the head repeatedly by passengers heaved for the rear, laden with even more carry-on junk. When the plane lands, the same ridiculous process is repeated over and over.

I was under the impression that there were regulations limiting the number (and size) of carry-on luggage. This should be enforced at the security checkpoint, and offenders should be sent back to check their excess baggage. By the time the flight attendant sees them on the plane, it's too late. However, booting them off the plane would make them think twice about doing it again.

ALSO IRRITATED IN NEW ORLEANS: I was waiting for a flight attendant to boot a passenger off the plane. Only the captain has the authority to make that decision.

P.S. And how about people who carry on golf bags, tennis rackets and hockey sticks? Also, travelers with shopping bags filled with gift-wrapped packages — around Christmas time, when all the planes are flying full.

DEAR ABBY: I work in a large office — there are 14 of us here — and occasions frequently come up where "the office gang" sends a gift to a co-worker. It can be flowers for a funeral, a wedding gift, or something for a new baby. Since I have been here the longest, I'm the one who usually collects the money.

The problem: when someone says, "I'm a little short right now; please put my name on the card, and I'll pay you after next payday."

Their name goes on the card, but they never seem to get around to paying me, so I'm left holding the bag. One of the worst offenders is a woman who has worked here almost as long as I have. Any suggestions?

— DISGUSTED
DEAR DISGUSTED: Heed this old Abby-ism: "If people take advantage of you once, shame on them; if they take advantage of you twice — shame on you."

Collect the money before the gift is purchased, making it clear that only those who have paid their share will have their names on the card.

DEAR ABBY: The person in Palos Verdes, Calif., whose privacy is being violated by helicopters should call the Federal Aviation Administration in his area. FAA laws are very strict on flying no lower than 1,000 feet in a populated area, unless it is an emergency.

I apologize for a few inconsiderate pilots who make us all look bad.

HAGERMAN — The Hagerman Fossil Beds National Monument is offering a tour examining "Environmental Ideals."

The tour will address the preservation of the natural environment. The influence of non-native plants and human impacts threaten to destroy primitive beauty. Participants will have the opportunity to decide for themselves where the line dividing use from abuse is — should access be limited or non-native vegetation removed to allow use?

Those attending should meet at the monument's visitor center on Highway 30 across from Hagerman High School. The group will depart at 9 a.m. and return around noon. Bring your own vehicle suitable for travel over paved and gravel roads, and dress appropriately for hot weather with possible wind and thunderstorms. Wear sturdy, comfortable shoes as a number of short hikes are available.

For more information, call 837-4793.

Role of lava fields described at Craters

ARCO — The Snake River Plain's volcanic features and a rising moon will provide the backdrop for an evening program planned for this weekend at the Craters of the Moon National Monument.

Beginning at 8 p.m. Saturday atop Inferno Cone, a park ranger will describe the changing role people have played on the lava fields of southern Idaho in this century.

Ranger Paul Lloyd Davies said the monument is best known as the site of spectacular volcanic eruptions, most recently 2,100 years ago. He said the volcanic features determine how people use the landscape; in the past century, we've seen a shift from emigrants avoiding the lava to a quarter of a million tourists each year.

Participants should meet at 7:30 p.m. Saturday at the Inferno Cone parking lot on Craters Loop Drive, two miles past the monument entrance. Wear sturdy shoes and bring a flashlight, light jacket, flashlight and blanket to sit on. Rangers will guide visitors up a steep quarter-mile trail to the top of Inferno Cone.

For more information, call 527-3257 between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. No reservations are required. A $4 per vehicle fee to enter the park will be charged.

Down-home Buttane to be installed as Jobie queen

Blaine Fair set Tuesday

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

CAREY — Perhaps the Magic Valley's most down-home county fair begins its five-day run Tuesday.

The Blaine County Fair, held at the intimate Blaine County Fairgrounds here, is a show designed for the locals. It's dominated by 4-H and Future Farmers of America events, and even its rodeo is limited to residents of the county.

The fair starts Tuesday with a style show at 7:30 p.m. in the Carey High School gym. On Wednesday, exhibits open at 6 p.m. for public bids on the 4-H silent auction, after a day of 4-H horse, sheep and swine judging. A junior jamboree, for Blaine County residents only, begins at 7:30.

The exhibits open to the public on Thursday, a day otherwise set aside for livestock judging and showing. A pet-on-parade contest is scheduled for 4 p.m., with a 4-H archery contest at 6 and a theater presentation at 7. The little kids' rodeo, also for county residents only, starts at 7:30 in the arena.

On Friday, swine, dairy, beef and sheep fitting and showing are scheduled during the day, with the annual barbecue slated from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. The silent auction closes at 6:30 p.m., and the Blaine County princess will be crowned at 7:30. At 8, jackpot barrel racing and piggyback racing are scheduled in the arena.

Saturday's highlight is the annual 4-H/FFA market sale, scheduled for 1:30 p.m. The county-only rodeo is planned for 8.

Mud

"There is about $10,000 invested in this," said Terry Budd, president of the local mud racing association. "So it had better draw some fans."

"Mud racing actually pays better than drag racing," Carlisle said. "We go to races in Lewiston, Moses Lake (Wash.), Rock Springs (Wyo.), Mountain Home and Soda Springs, and we live in a motorhome right by the track."

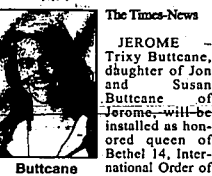

Mud racing is essentially a sprint through 100 feet of mud, which can be a foot to 16 inches deep. The effect is something like peeling out on an ice-covered street lined with snowdrifts.

"You have to have to give them some room," Budd said. "The other day at Mountain Home, one guy blew his brakes and went right through the fence."

There will be seven classes of vehicles at the Jerome arena this weekend, ranging from snowmobiles to modified trucks with 44-inch tires.

But mud racing is an extremely rough, demanding sport; anybody with mud flaps and a roll-bar can usually find a race.

"It isn't as organized as some other sports," Budd said. "It's just a lot of fun."

The Times-News

JEROME — Trissy Buttane, daughter of Jon and Susan Buttane, will be installed as honored queen of Bethel 14, International Order of Job's Daughters, at 5:57 p.m. Saturday at the Jerome Masonic Lodge, 225 First Ave. E.

Officers include Jennifer Traugher, senior princess; Lanel Decoteau, junior princess; Davina Nutsch, guide; Karl Hopper, marshal; Amanda Hagen, recorder; Jeanne Cooper, librarian; Jessica Candiani, chaplain; and Rana Decoteau, Traci McClure, Laura Dunne and Kristine Dunne, choir members.

MaryLynn Montgomery will serve as installing honored queen. She will be assisted by Tonya Buttane, guide; Teri McClure, marshal; Miranda Brown, chaplain; Tami Childers, recorder; Pat Traugher, senior custodian; and Gail Decoteau, junior custodian. The Twin Falls Order of Demolay and the Knights Templar will also be assisting in the ceremony.

The public is invited.

Jr., rock to classical: Mooney brings 13 years of musical experience and four years in the valley to her performances.

• Saturday at 2:30 p.m., Ken Britton and Bill Smith, both long-time residents of Wood River Valley, bring along the Boulder Brothers Band to share the folk songs and cowboy music of America, and the folk songs of Canada and Ireland.

• Saturday at 3:30 p.m., John Gibson performs an acoustic set of mostly original songs and a few covers, backed by Woody Graham on bass and Mic Terra on rhythm guitar.

Gibson is a local songwriter who said he "escaped from southern California to settle in the Wood River Valley" and whose songs bemoan "the trials and tribulation of living in America."

• Saturday at 4:30 p.m., comedian Greg Keeler, a self-proclaimed "redneck for wilderness," takes the stage to expose the excesses and absurdities of western America in funny and thoughtful folk satire.

A writer and English professor, Keeler has gained national attention through his books, articles, recordings, musical comedies and TV and radio performances.

• Saturday at 5:30 p.m., with banjo, mandolin, guitar and string bass, Ketchum band Doc Tater performs "hard-driving bluegrass" — acoustic instrumentals played at breakneck speeds, three-part vocal harmonies, lyrics about heartbreak and hard-luck and an occasional appearance from the tuba.

• Saturday at 6:30 p.m., Mumbo Gumbo gives a second serving of their Gulf Coast mix.

• Saturday at 8 p.m., entertainers take a little time out while the Sun Valley Center holds a quilt raffle.

• Saturday at 8:30 p.m., champion fiddler, vocalist and songwriter Laurie Lewis wraps up the folk festival with a flourish of traditional music and her own strongly personal lyrical imagery. In a style both haunting and whimsical, she weaves bluegrass and country songs using images drawn from the hills of Northern California and the San Francisco Bay area.

Lewis' album "Love Chooses You" was awarded 1989-90 Country Album of the Year by the National Association of Independent Record Distributors and Producers. In 1992, she was named Female Vocalist of the Year by the International Bluegrass Music Association.

Her band Grant Street, featured frequently on the Grand Ole Opry, has created a melting pot of rural roots music, from bluegrass, old-time country duets, swing torch songs and contemporary folk ballads.

Spielberg's 'Schindler's List' offers a horrifying vision of the Holocaust.

'Heaven and Earth' moves into local video rental stores

The Times-News

New movies in Twin Falls video stores this week:

"Schindler's List" (R). It took Steven Spielberg a decade to bring his spiritual, devastating and powerful statement to the screen. It can be argued that Spielberg was correct in waiting, that it took him that long to mature as a serious filmmaker.

And he has. With the Academy Award-winning "Schindler's List," Spielberg has evolved from high-tech, fantasy-filled candy-cane storylines and disabling cuteness to thoughtful, intelligent and deeply felt movie-making.

"Schindler's List" offers a vision of the Holocaust that leaves us breathless, that weaves a bloodied tapestry of horror, German ignorance and tyranny. But it is a tapestry cleansed by an enormous humanity, by a redemption extraordinary and exquisite.

It is a movie worth keeping in your video collection. You won't regret it.

Filmed in pristine black and white, the film illuminates terror and atrocity in complicated, shimmering light plays and shadows. Janusz Kaminski's cinematography is dazzling.

It was wise for Spielberg to use black and white because it truly takes us back to the 1940s and allows for greater dramatic interplay.

Throughout the film, there is a strong sense of urgency, of terror. Spielberg paces it so precisely that you hardly feel the mere march of time for the story to unfold. And he shows the Nazis going about their extermination of Jews in such a matter-of-fact way that the atrocities are all the more horrific.

One scene especially mirrors the German killing machine: the Nazi points a gun at the head of a Jew, but the gun does not fire. He clicks it several times, and still, it does not fire. It is an unnerving scene and perhaps more frightening than the legion of other killings shown on screen.

"Schindler's List" is based on the real-life story of Oskar Schindler, a German-Catholic industrialist who used his ties with Nazi officialdom to help keep hundreds of Jews from concentration camps and death.

Schindler, played by a rather beefy and swaggering Liam Neeson, is a bon vivant: He enjoys women, wine, good food, good times, and more women. He is wealthy, but craves even more money and power.

But as the Holocaust engulfs Europe, Schindler slowly wrestles with a higher morality.

With the assistance of a Jewish bookkeeper, Itzhak Stern (Ben Kingsley), he devises a complex scheme to outwit the Nazis by employing Jewish refugees in his factory. He saves them from death, but it's a constant cat-and-mouse game.

His biggest hurdle is the psychotic commandant of the Plaszow forced labor camp, Amon Goeth, masterfully played by Ralph Fiennes. Goeth uses Jews for random target practice, firing his gun from a balcony overlooking the prison yard.

In many respects, Goeth is perhaps a more complicated man than Schindler. Spielberg makes much of exploring his character, but never really gets there.

By the end of the movie, Schindler emotionally falls apart, overcome by his inability to save even more Jewish lives than he did. His transformation is a bit over the top, and it's difficult to see his evolution.

If Spielberg's primary goal is to show us that faith and goodness can sometimes triumph over evil, then he has done so with his very powerful portrait of a singular man.

Along the way, there are scenes that will haunt for some time to come, such as one in a railroad yard as the Nazis shift off unsuspecting Jews to death camps. The camera works as porters take their suitcases to a cavernous warehouse. Slowly, the camera pans tables laden with photos, toys and mountains of shoes and clothing.

Spielberg ends his movie in color by shifting to today: He parades some of the Schindler survivors past his grave. It is a moving scene, but an unnecessary one. (Associated Press) (Video West, Blockbuster)

"Heaven and Earth" (R) Like all of Oliver Stone's movies, "Heaven and Earth" is no easy experience. In this sometimes-tiresome, sometimes-brilliant movie, Stone returns to the war in Vietnam to complete the trilogy that began with "Platoon" and "Born on the Fourth of July."

This time he's telling the story from the point of view of the Vietnamese themselves. The saga of the film's real-life heroine, Le Ly (Hiep Thi Le), is a harrowing, epic tale of upheaval and suffering. As a depiction of the devastation and loss endured by the natives of this once beautiful country, "Heaven and Earth" is relentlessly thorough. And because Stone can create images that sear the senses, we sit in our seats half afraid to look at the screen.

But he is also a filmmaker with a hole in his head, and his dubious grasp of the facts combined with his obsessively passionate convictions about the war are problematic as well. The most effective, most powerfully contemporary part of the film focuses on Ly's relationship with an American soldier named Steve (Tommy Lee Jones). Partly this is due to Jones' excruciating, skinless performance, and partly because Stone, whose screen women have always seemed stunted and one-dimensional, had an easier time crawling inside the character of this naive American man.

"Heaven and Earth" is supposed to be Stone's woman's picture, the film that not only shows the Vietnamese point of view but a feminine perspective as well. Yet almost despite himself, Stone makes Steve the most memorable character in the film. (Washington Post) (Blockbuster)

Lawyer spins winning tale in Faulkner writing contest

Typewritten, 500-word entries for the sixth Faulkner contest should be mailed to P.O. Box 248, Oxford, Miss. 38655.

OXFORD, Miss. (AP) — Take a legendary Halloween night football game in Dixie, stir in a mouthful of adjectives and roll it into a 355-word sentence and you have country lawyer Samuel Tunney's recipe for winning the William Faulkner writing contest.

Tunney, who crafted his entry over the past two years in between representing criminals, gardening and coaching Little League baseball, is this year's winner of the bad Faulkner contest.

When I sit down to read Faulkner, it's like picking up the Bible. It's become almost biblical down here, said Tunney, whose victory comes in his fifth try in the annual contest. "It's not brain surgery, and it's not war. I didn't get upset when they didn't win before. I did it for fun."

Previous winners have hailed from Canada, England, Chicago and New York, a far cry from Tunney's 600-person hometown of Liberty in southwest Mississippi. He's the first Mississippian to win the contest, named after the Mississippi master who crafted a signature rhetorical style in chronicling the decay of the South following the Civil War in such works as "The Sound and the Fury."

In his entry, Tunney writes about a Faulkner character at Harvard University who attempts to describe to his classmate the romantic style of a 1959 game between Ole Miss and Louisiana State University. Billy Cannon's punt return for a touchdown put LSU ahead 6-3. He writes:

"Third down punting — not to your regular warrior, red-clay safety man but to the great football player in the Christian World, huge and menacing: he ran over ten men, then straight up, faced the punter, who I remember at fifty might have, unaided, emptied a tavern) and then that voice on the radio echoing in despair across the darkened fields and hamlets and up to the Tennessee River, that voice counting the yard markers in descending order.

Tunney's "Quentin and Shreve on Football" bested 700 entries.

Dean Faulkner Wells, niece of the 1949 Nobel Prize-winning author, said Faulkner might not have written about football, but she said he would have liked the Southern style of the winning entries. Charlottesville, Va., novelist John Ruemmler won second with "An Odor of Verbiage" and Stanford University Professor Wendy Goldberg took third with "If Ever an Iz There Was."

Ruemmler writes: "Kiss me, Barnyard, extravagantly, fallaciously." The verbiage she employed smelled stronger than the horse I rode. "Kiss me contagiously, phonetically." "No, you are Father's second wife, my fourth cousin, and that's your sixth adverb."

Wells said entries arrive by the busloads each year from across the United States and many foreign countries. Wells and husband, Larry, pile them on their kitchen table in their quaint home not far from where Faulkner lived.

"Last year we had seven or eight from Bangladesh. We had every state except Utah. I whooped and hollered the day an entry came in (this year from Utah)," she said. "It's fun, and obviously the people who enter really get a kick out of what they're doing."

Faulkner died in 1962, and the contest modeled after a similar one for Ernest Hemingway was started in 1989.

Many of the Faulkner write-a-likes use a Southern dialect.

"The Wendy Goldberg has probably never been across the Continental Divide let alone the Mason Dixon line, but she still makes it work," said Wells.

Tunney, a graduate of Ole Miss, was feted by several hundred people as part of the Oxford college's Faulkner and Yoknapatawpha Conference.

Tunney said his Southern background and understated humor helped in the contest sponsored by the American Airlines magazine and judged by John Grisham, Willie Morris, Barry Hannah and Jack Hemingway.

Imitating Faulkner "would be easy to do badly," Tunney said. "It all depends on your approach. There's not a lot of slapstick or outlandish humor in mine."

"Don't go out of your way to be funny," Tunney said. "Write something that's overly serious, and even pretentious, bombastic and you'll come out better."

Tunney won two American Airlines tickets, good for passage anywhere it flies. Several of the past winners were ticketed to Hawaii, but Tunney, 46, said he and his wife "are just not the Hawaii type." He plans to travel to Gettysburg, Pa., on a pilgrimage.

Faulkner, a Civil War buff, would have approved, said Wells.

Winning Entry: "Quentin and Shreve on Football,"

By Samuel M. Tunney of Liberty, Miss. It began long ago here, a Yankee game, just a good football game, and then a few men whose fathers marched into the Whitefield with Barksdale or rode with Forrest and their sons and grandsons taking up the thing every weary autumn until legends had grown up and dissolved in the dust of generations, still the swampy time lingering, whispering, like the seductive effluvia of the lavender-scented Lost Cause: to one day whip the Yankees in some great stadium — and then from the Plains out beyond the Sabine cane (in public demeanor and strategic faculties) a God-Coach, his army molded, seemingly, from the very hills that hid the Colfax and quarterbacks immortal now as well, though he, the God-Coach, make them from dust) so that faraway autumn a great wave rolled out of the Yoknapatawpha bottomland, flags unfurled, not up to the Ohio River, but south, south to the Beahm of Bayous, of Tipical Inhumanity convened on Halloween Night under hideous purple and gold banners in a spirit-pauper of adjustable time-pieces and expandable cross-bars, the very grass oozing mud in a drought when needed, fog circling the goal posts, shades of those long dead rising from perdition to fandon, and beneath a great hunter's moon, fifty-five minutes of vituperation mist, hunkering down, ground-hudding and third down punting — hunkering (the rest of us) in the pumpkin glow of the vacuum tubes — third down punting — not to your regular warrior, red-clay safety man but to the great football player in the Christian World, huge and menacing: he ran over ten men, then straight up, faced the punter, (who I remember at fifty might have, unaided, emptied a tavern) and then that voice on the radio echoing in despair across the darkened fields and hamlets and up to the Tennessee River, that voice counting the yard markers in descending order, the wave receding in recrimination and despair, the God-Coach old amidst his fame, the Yankees still not played, much less whipped, and, us, a whole generation, now fat-bellied and bald, holding to that night like an old wrinkled up Confederate dollar bill.

He said, "It's insane. Whoever heard of fans immortalizing defeat?"

I said, "But growing up with Chickadee and Shish and Joe Johnston skulking around Canton instead of saving Vicksburg, maybe winning is transient, only a respite."

"And the reason," he said, "Your great-granddads cut up the flags and hid them in trunks..."

"From losing," I said. "Because when all sources of pride are exhausted there remains the consolation of having repented of pride, and having learned humility, and bearing one's humiliation with such saintly and obvious relief that it will be mistaken for pride."

And he said, "You people are really just hopeless."

"An Odor of Verbiage"

By John Ruemmler of Charlottesville, Va.

Part I

Just after supper, Mrs. Wilkins thinking as Granny would have thought A living dog is better than a dead lion, especially in the kitchen, John-Paul-George-Ringo said, "They shot Colonel Sartoris this morning." I should have known, I should have felt a premonition, for it was a dry October, before the equinox and now there was Father's blood spilling on the earth to end the drought. Wordless, John-Paul-George-Ringo and I rode away into the thick musky dust past Oxford, county seat of a county with more syllables than sense, Yoknapatawpha, Chickadee for "See you comin'" — wish you'd stayed where you was." Left behind in the parlor Mrs. Wilkins was thinking as Granny would have thought Dwell in the land of Nod before she was nodding off in the bovine horseshair chair, sleeping peacefully as only a woman with thin gray hair can sleep. No Lullaby, but Um-hoo, um-hoo, an adlibbed mockingbird's song.

Part II

I was twenty then, four summers ago, as Dustily gathered adverbs gaily and flagrantly. "Kiss me passionately, Barnyard. Immediately." In her open hand lay three apple pips.

"No you are Father's wife."

"Kiss me."

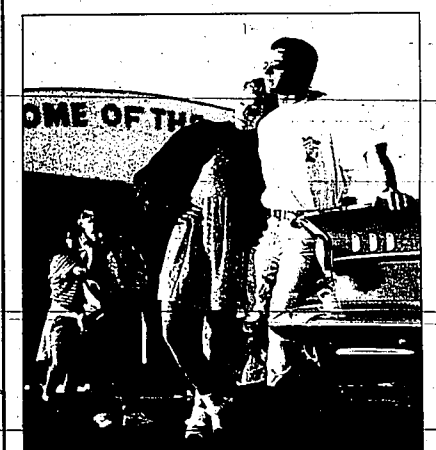

"You misused 'fallaciously' and abused 'phonetically'."

"Kiss me, Barnyard."

"No."

"I shall next employ 'rapaciously'."

I put my arms around her, inhaling the odor of verbiage, the sickly sweet verdant perfume of adverbial excess. She melted as women will and do, and I stepped over the puddle and into law school...

Buffett moves out of 'Margaritaville,' heads for Palm Beach

Knight-Ridder News Service

In Arthurian legend, it was the land without a king.

For Parrotheads, it's the party without the host.

Jimmy Buffett has left Key West. Not entirely, mind you. The singer, songwriter and perennial summer concert favorite still keeps a studio on the Florida island. It's also the home to one of his Margaritaville clubs.

But the Buffett clan — wife Jane and daughters Savannah Jane, 15, and Sarah Delaney, 2 — have relocated to the Florida mainland, homesteading in Palm Beach (they also have a summer house in Long Island). On the surface it's a minor move. Buffett is still close enough to whisk down to Key West for some fishing, and Palm Springs is suited to the sun 'n' fun that are crucial to his image.

But for Buffett's legion of fans — dubbed Parrotheads (for reasons unknown) by the Eagles' Timothy B. Schmit — the symbolism of his move is strong. Key West is the spiritual center of Buffett's "Margaritaville," a mythic mind-set mecca of Hawaiian shirts, no socks and cold, fruity cocktails.

"On one of the computer bulletin boards, someone took a shot at him for living in Palm Beach with all the millionaires," says Marty Lehmann, editor of the Buffett newsletter Coconut Telegraph. "But these people came to his defense. They said, 'So what? He's made a lot of money. Leave him alone.'"

Moving, Buffett explains, was strictly for his children.

"I've moved for the schools," Buffett, 47, says. "Key West is a great place; it's idyllic, a place where you can be a kid forever. But I don't want to raise my children down there."

His oldest daughter hardly seems worse for the wear. Savannah Jane has coauthored two children's books with her father, and when she visits him on the road "she likes to get on

'Someday, I might not tour like I do now — really. You're laughing; why does everybody laugh when I say that? Anyway, it's been nice to see that there are all these other things I can do, too.'

— Jimmy Buffett

that stage and sing backup, so God help us," Buffett says with a laugh.

The move hasn't dampened Buffett's career, either. He's busier than ever. Buffett still makes vague noises about not touring as much —

"I don't feel like I can do 70 or 80 of them and keep up the same energy level" — but another summer has come and found him drawing the usual sell-out crowds at amphitheaters around the country.

For the first time in five years, Buffett also has new music for his devotees. "Fruit Cakes" is his 23rd album and his first of fresh material since 1989's "Off to See the Lizard." It's largely what you'd expect from a Buffett album: spirited sea chanteys; a couple of country tunes; some mellow, reflective ballads, and covers of the Grateful Dead's "Uncle John's Band." Buffett's favorite Dead song, and the Kinks' appropriately titled "Sunny Afternoon."

"I just wanted to make a record for Parrotheads and people who like Jimmy Buffett music," says Buffett, who hasn't had a hit since "Fins" in 1979.

"I didn't aspire to challenge radio, who had never played me before, or MTV. I have better things to worry about than that. ... I went and made a record I felt comfortable with; I like having the freedom to do that without anybody saying 'Aren't you worried about having a hit?'"

And records are only one part of Buffett's multimedia empire — though his Nashville-based Margaritaville label is a burgeoning concern that puts out albums by the Iguanas and other artists.

His main interest now is a stage musical based on Herman Wouk's "Don't Start the Carnival." Wouk is working on it with Buffett — who once turned down the lead in "The Will Rogers Follies" — and the two are finishing the first draft of the script. They're also meeting with directors and investors, though no deals have been signed yet.

Wouk's book, says Buffett, is "a bible to anyone who lives in the Caribbean. To do it with Herman and attempt to make it work and make a calypso musical with it is right up my alley."

On the big screen, Buffett is finalizing a Paramount Pictures film adaptation of "Where is Joe Merchant?" the detective story that's one of his two New York Times best-sellers. A movie version of his 1977 signature hit "Margaritaville" is still being discussed, "like a fish in the box that won't die."

And Buffett has a bit part in the upcoming movie "Cobb," which stars Tommy Lee Jones as the Detroit Tiger great.

"I'm the heckler he beat up in Boston," says Buffett, who's part owner of a minor league baseball team. "They let me write my own part, and I thought of all the things that had been yelled at me over the years. I told him 'I hope your mother runs the link of chain and bites you in the ass!'"

Anything that would ignite him. "He got pretty incensed. There was Tommy Lee Jones in spikes coming over the wall, which is something I forgot about. He really captured Cobb as the mean son of a bitch he was."

So regardless of where he calls home these days, Buffett's sail is up and has a full wind behind it. "Someday," he says, "I might not tour like I do now — really. You're laughing; why does everybody laugh when I say that?"

"Anyway, it's been nice to see that there are all these other things I can do, too."

Prince's look back takes step forward

Orange County Register, The Associated Press and Knight-Ridder News Service

Here's what's new in the record racks:

Prince, "Come: 1958-1993" (Warner Bros.) Complete the following sentence, Prince, or whatever he's calling himself this hour, is:

1. One of the most innovative musical artists of the past two decades who, in the homogenized and pasteurized early '80s, almost single-handedly yanked rock back to its black roots and had both black and white rock 'n' under his purple banner.

2. An overplayed irrelevancy with delusions of pop grandeur whose career has deteriorated into a series of empty poses and really, really, really bad moves.

3. One weird little guy.

4. All of the above.

The correct answer, of course, is No. 4. Rarely has an artist released from brilliant to boring with such alacrity as this mercurial Minnesotan. And now it's time to revise opinions again.

With the release of "Come" on Tuesday, Prince — who's not using his symbol name on this one — makes his strongest, and funkier, bid for relevancy since "Sign O' the Times" and the uncelebrated "Black Album" in the late '80s. And, surprise, he largely succeeds.

For those of us who were enthusiastic Prince partisans in the beginning, any hint of his old gleam under the recent murk is welcome indeed. After all, in his own way, Prince was downright revolutionary.

To put Prince in perspective, jet back past Lollapalooza, WOMAD, Fishbone, Living Colour and "Beat It" and land in the late '70s/early '80s. Radio had ossified into formats as segregated as any old-style Johannesburg neighborhood. So-called progressive rock radio, which once played the likes of Sly and the Family Stone, War and Stevie Wonder along with Jeff Beck and Led Zeppelin, had serious fear of a black planet. Only Jimi Hendrix survived on its playlists — and he was dead.

Back then, George Clinton probably would have been about as welcome opening for, say, Krokus or Journey as a tomat at a fish fry.

As one who, for personal and professional reasons, attended several rock concerts a week from the late '70s through the mid-'80s, I can count the number of truly integrated large hall/arena shows of the time. Bob Marley, Kraftwerk, Weather Report and Earth Wind and Fire come to mind, though, in the strictest sense, none of these was a rock act.

A friend at the time — who considered himself radical enough to work for Ronald Reagan's election because he thought things would get so bad that "the revolution" would result — said, seemingly only half-jokingly, that he was leery of going to a Parliament Funkadelic (George Clinton) show. White punks he could handle, he said, but black punks scared him.

Similarly, a girlfriend at the time marveled at being one of the few white faces at a George Clinton show in Hollywood. For me, that all changed when Prince took the stage in 1980 at Flipper, a now-defunct roller disco in West Hollywood.

Prince, who'd previously released two rather lackluster albums ("Please," "For You"), had just put out "Dirty Mind," a blazing call to sexual, racial and rock 'n' roll arms. Before the show, an electricity was surging through town that the Department of Water and Power probably detected; Prince was the guy to catch.

And, in front of a multi-racial crowd, he delivered on every promise, turning in a show that brought back the danger and raw energy of Chuck Berry, Jackie Wilson and Sly and the Family Stone. The Rolling Stones saw the parallels and asked the Diminutive One to open their L.A. date. But, talking about a sign o' the times, Prince was roundly booed.

Yet Prince surged from strength to strength, culminating in the solid one-two punch in 1984 of the "Purple Rain" soundtrack and movie.

But there was trouble in the purple paradise. Hip-hop, dance music and the rock-funk hybrid were carrying on Prince's revolution, while he was like some general who'd abdicated his position. (Perhaps to parallel Prince's evolution, Flipper became an Esprit store.)

Prince, who still could put on a knockout live show when he felt like it, had gone off to search for the ladder, as he called it, and has only rarely come in from the cold since then. With "Come," he's partly found his way again.

This album was supposedly the last thing he recorded before changing his name to that pasted-on she-male symbol — that's why "Come" is being marketed as a Prince record — but it's more than just the moniker that's old.

Prince has ditched much of the bland New Power Generation and, just like the old days, reportedly recorded much of the album himself. Thankfully, he's no longer jumping every stylistic train that trundles through his station. There's no hip-hop on "Come" — and he doesn't try his hand at techno or ambient. Instead, he does what he does best: rock-flavored funk. He puts it right on "Let It Go": "Now I got let it go, maybe I can let the vibe just flow."

True, there's nothing really new on "Come," which is why it can't rank with Prince's groundbreaking "Dirty Mind," "1999" or "Purple Rain." From the opening title track, with its chiming "Silly Boy Crush" rhythm and Sly and the Family Stone horns — "Come" comes dressed in funk hand-dressed-downs, some of the Purple One's own creation.

Wylie, Montana-flavored music hit road

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

JACKPOT — Wylie and the Wild West Show is just what it sounds like. Wylie is Wylie Crockett, who grew up making music alongside his father, singing cowboy songs around campfires at dude ranches. The Wild West Show is a rip-roaring mix of classic country, neo-western, honky tonk and rock.

"There's a little bit of everything," said Wylie, who's dropped his last name since he hit the stage running four years ago. "It's a blend of styles, a mash up of influences."

Wylie talked about his band in a Tuesday phone interview between stops on the road. He's already completed an 18-city major market tour to promote his new album, "Get Wild." In fact, he's touring 90 percent of the time now, he said, and will be performing in Europe next month.

One of the band's tunes has been played on the hit TV series "Northern Exposure." The group has performed on "Music City Tonight" and at the Grand Old Opry. On Sept. 2, Wylie will take his buddies to TNN's "Club Dance."

Wylie attributes his success to the fact that he has a "Singing from the heart" band that's true to its roots, a country-western band that's based in the West. He also says he's a real cowboy.

Raised on a cattle ranch in northern Montana, Wylie played in his brother's band in high school. After two years of business management studies at the University of Montana, he packed up and moved to Los Angeles to network with the local musicians there.

Shortly after Wylie convened his Wild West Show, he racked up five California country music awards. In 1991, he won the Marlboro Western

"We move around a lot on stage," said Wylie of his live show. "We make sure the audience has fun."

One of the highlights of the show is Wylie's yodeling. "It's a lost art, and I'm trying to bring it back," he said.

Wylie is 33 now, and he lives in eastern Washington with his wife ("my anchor"). The couple have no children. Kenny Griffin, Ray Doyle and Mike Fried are the Wild West Show. Wylie writes most of their songs, with titles like "Ugly Girl Blues," "How Do Ya Feel?" and "Honeydew."

"We want to make a long career out of this," Wylie said, looking toward his big sky of a future. "We are building up a loyal audience, and we don't want to just be a shooting star."

Ex-Californian launches Twin Falls theater group

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Harold Miller came to Twin Falls to build a boat in his brother's backyard. He ended up building a theater troupe.

"I just looked around and didn't see a theater group here of the type I had in mind," said Miller, who said he worked a director and assistant director in California. "So I thought it might be fun to start one."

The result was the Flying Penguin Theatre, which will present "The Hanging of Abner Martin," a one-act play, as its first dinner-theater production next Thursday at the Turf Club.

"The play will actually come after the time the dinner is served," Miller said. "Before that, we'll have waiters singing."

Singing waiters were, in fact, the genesis of Miller's idea. He recruited most of them from local karaoke clubs, and turned to Brent Blackburn for the play.

Blackburn, who taught drama at Twin Falls and Buhl high schools and is now a counselor, met Miller when Miller brought him some of his plays to critique. In the process, Miller mentioned his dinner-theater concept.

"I told him I didn't like his plays, but I had one that would work," Blackburn said.

It was "Abner Martin," a one-act black comedy written by a college friend of Blackburn's, Gordon Howard, about a man who hangs himself and hangs around to observe his life.

"It's an ideal play for dinner theater," said Blackburn, who is now a counselor. "It's light, and very enjoyable."

Blackburn recruited a former student, Paul Bach, who was involved in the original production at Buhl High in 1969.

"That was the debut," Blackburn said.

Bach, now a Kimberly police officer, plays Charley, the hero. Abner, is played by Wade Flying Penguin Theatre will present Gordon Howard's "The Hanging of Abner Martin" in a dinner theater production on Thursday at 7 p.m. at the Turf Club. Tickets, which are $20, are available at LaRae's, 135 Main Ave. E., and at Jerry's, 149 Main Ave. E., or by calling 736-7133.

A second show is planned for Friday, Sept. 9, at the Turf Club.

Matthews, a student who runs a local clown business.

"He's a fine actor, very talented," Blackburn said. "He's ideal for Abner."

Terry Elsherry of Filer and Donnell Green of Jerome share the female lead, John Southwick, also a member of the original production, will also play both Charley and Abner.

"I've done community theater before, and it's a lot different than working with high school kids," Blackburn said. "These people have lives and kids, and it takes a lot of dedication for them to include theater in their lives."

"Between the songs — show tunes, rock, country — will come what Blackburn calls 'entree acts,' including comedy sketches and stand-up comedy."

"Everything but dance," Blackburn said.

Both Miller, who now works as a loss prevention officer at ShopKo, and Blackburn have in mind a second production at Christmastime, perhaps Miller's "Twelve Days of Christmas."

"I think this group has great potential," Blackburn said. "Dinner theater, if it's done well, should include all the arts, and we can do that."

The boat, by the way, is coming along slowly.

"It's not going to be finished this year," Miller said.

Grateful Dead, others make living outside rules

New York Daily News

"To live outside the law you must be honest," Bob Dylan once wrote, but living outside the rules of the music biz requires a few other things.

Mainly, it requires fans who will stay loyal even if you aren't making records for a major label (as George Michael has vowed not to do while under contract to Sony) or touring (as Pearl Jam has vowed not to do if Ticketmaster adds what the band considers an excessive service charge).

Recording and touring, of course, are the cornerstones of the popular-music business.

Artists make a record, shoot videos, maybe do interviews and radio TV shows, then tour. Each part of the system promotes the revenue-generating areas of record and ticket sales, and artists who skip any step are made to understand it may cost both them and the record company money.

Michael and Pearl Jam have reached a level of success without having to afford to challenge this system, through the potential long-term effect of either case is unclear.

Michael wants to record, just not for Sony, and while Pearl Jam's battle with Ticketmaster has sparked a Senate hearing, nothing suggests much sentiment for tampering with the free-market system that has brought Ticketmaster to its present position of power.

Still, most artists might not mount even this much of a challenge, because those struggling to reach or maintain viable popularity just about have to get with the program.

"That doesn't mean, however, that no alternatives exist, and the best illustration of this is the Grateful Dead.

"The Dead is an alternative in just about every way," says Dennis McNally, the band's spokesman. "What we do isn't unique, but we make it work, when you need most is a strong relationship with your audience. And you have to be there for them all the time."

The Dead system means constant touring, with only occasional recording. Since 1980, the Dead have released just two studio albums while selling millions of concert tickets a year.

Furthermore, they sell many of those tickets themselves, through a fan network — not meaning that most of the Dead's music income goes to the band, not record companies or middle men.

McNally points out, however, that this was not always true.

"When the Dead started, they had to make regular albums like everyone else. They always had a fan base, but it took 10 years before it was big enough for the band to make a good living. When they went into the studio in 1970 to make 'Workingman's Dead,' they were $200,000 in debt. They had to make a record — and fortunately it was brilliant and it sold like crazy."

If the Dead's system is the most impressive example of living outside some of the law, it's not the only one.

John Prine, Arlo Guthrie and Tom Rush are among the veteran artists who have set up their own record companies — not under labels whose distribution is still under major-label control, but independent entities.

While this might entail a reduction in lifestyle for some, these artists all say it maintains their careers at comfortable, profitable levels.

Rush sells records by mail order, through ads in outlets like Yankee magazine. "We can sell 25,000 copies," he says. "Which is more than any major could sell."

Prine set up Oh Boy Records in the '80s, and it's been successful enough that he's now signing other artists. "I had an offer to go back with a major couple of years ago," he says. "I turned it down. I just wasn't ready to go back into the system."

In a sense, what Prine, Guthrie, Rush and others do isn't much different from the gospel, folk and country artists who press tapes or CDs and sell them from the back of a pickup truck at county fairs. The Recording Industry Association of America doesn't count these sales, but says millions of records are sold this way annually.

"The longer I see the music business in operation," Merle Haggard said a couple of years ago, "the more I think the way to go is your own business. Make your records and sell 'em like Slim Whitman or Boxcar Willie. Maybe you sacrifice a little money, but you live a lot longer."

Cold captains have their reasons

The human body cools 23 times faster in 28.6-degree water than in 28.6-degree air. Such cooling kills quickly. That's why centuries of ship captains plying wintry waters so rarely have changed course to rescue those gone overboard.

What's what?

Even sex scenes fail in 'Color of Night'

Knight-Ridder News Service

Seeing as how it took him nearly a decade to bring "The Stunt Man" to the screen in 1980, it's understandable if director Richard Rush needed a break from the helm of a film. What had to be a draining experience resulted in a dark, hypnotic film about the movie industry and unavoidably raised expectations for whatever would follow.

Fourteen years is a long break. So it's especially disappointing that "Color of Night," the first movie he's directed since "The Stunt Man," falls so dismally short of his landmark film.

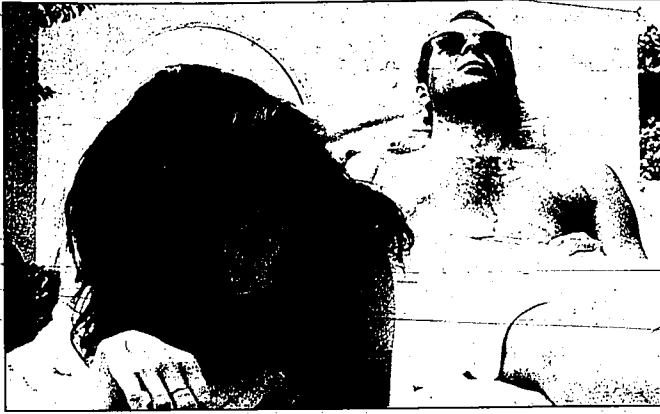

Movie review

Billed as an erotic thriller, "Color of Night" tries hard — too hard — to outdo recent hits in the genre. It wants to be sexier than "Basic Instinct," more mind-blowing than "The Crying Game." It fails on both counts and makes the viewer feel like adding numbingly convoluted psychological subplots to the mix.

Somewhat managing to bury what charm he has, Bruce Willis turns in a bland, unsympathetic lead performance. He's Bill Capa, a New York psychologist who abandons his fiery fashion. And shortly after escaping to Los Angeles and the comfort of an old friend/fellow practitioner, he faces more sudden violence and a whodunit mystery.

For someone fearing he's on the brink of insanity, Capa does well in the aftermath of such double-fisted tragedy, falling for the obligatory seductive-but-mysterious woman who literally runs into him (while driving).

Former model Jane March, who melted celluloid in "The Lover," is certainly beautiful on screen but doesn't possess the depth to pull off the role of mesmerizing femme fatale. What she does pull off is her clothes, a talent utilized in much talked-about sex scenes that inevitably fail to live up to the hype. The stale steaminess features plenty of underwater frolicking, but none of the rumored full-frontal nudity of Willis.

In the erotic thriller 'Color of Night,' Bruce Willis stars as Dr. Bill Capa, a psychologist running away from one trauma, searching for a killer who brutally murdered his colleague, and facing the consequences of a passionate but reckless affair with a mysterious seductress named Rose (Jane March, left).

Meanwhile, in what should be compelling stuff, Willis reluctantly takes on leadership of one of his colleagues' therapy groups. One of them could be a killer, the audience is repeatedly told — probably because the story does little, if anything, to establish motive for any of the tormented suspects. As patient-suspects, Brad Dourif ("One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest") and Lesley Ann Warren offer the movie's only inspired acting, but it's wasted in tedious, interminable therapy-session scenes that do little to advance the plot or develop characters.

The movie builds to a stronger conclusion than you'd expect, given the mediocrity of the first 90 or so minutes, and there are some twists (most of which you'll have figured out well in advance). Still, there are too many unanswered questions and — since it's nearly impossible to have connected emotionally with any of the characters — you won't even care to tie up the loose ends.

After facing the initial shock that begins the movie, Willis' character ceases to see the color red. If he'd sat through a thriller as aggravating as this one, he'd have no trouble seeing red. (Twin Cinema)

'Blankman': Revenge of nerd as anti-hero

Los Angeles Times

Movies playing in the Twin Falls area this weekend. Ratings are by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Blankman" (PG-13) The guy's got nothing — no money, no superpowers, not even a name. Damon Wayans is Blankman, the neighborhood crimebuster who, in his underwear and adorned with grandma's housecoat-turnedcape, battles evil with something you'll buy in a store. "Airheads" (PG-13) Loud, frenetic, mostly unfunny comedy about an L.A. rock group that takes a radio station hostage. Brendan Fraser is the group's leader. (Grand-Vu Drive-In)

"Clear and Present Danger" (PG-13) Harrison Ford strikes again as CIA analyst Jack Ryan in the summer's most satisfying movie experience. Easily the best and most tightly wound of the three Tom Clancy novels brought to the screen. (Twin Cinema, Jerome Cinema)

"The Client" (PG-13) Not particularly nuanced or finely tuned, Tom Cruise's John Grisham novel to reach the screen benefits from fine starring performances from Susan Sarandon and Tommy Lee Jones. Though much of what is seen isn't particularly convincing, its story of an 11-year-old boy in mortal danger from the mob does have the trademark Grisham qualities. (Twin Cinema, Jerome Cinema)

"Forrest Gump" (PG-13) Director Robert Zemeckis uses the story of a holy-fool whose IQ of 75 doesn't stop him from succeeding in life as a way to examine the turbulent recent decades of American history through a geologically cracked lens. In part a lovely piece of work, with marvelous special effects and a solid performance from Tom Hanks, it stumbles when it forces its charm in search of obvious sentimentality. (Mall Cinema)

"In the Army Now" (PG) An amiable if overly familiar service comedy that finds Paddy Shore and a sidekick (Andy Dick) signing up for the Army Reserve. (Mall Cinema)

"It Could Happen to You" (PG) Slight but charming comedy about a cop, played by Nicolas Cage, who gives half his $4 million lottery earnings to a waitress, played by Bridget Fonda because he promised her a tip (sort of). (Twin Cinema, Ace Theatre)

"The Lion King" (PG) The slickly stylized show in this latest animated extravaganza from Disney. From a trio of laughing hyenas to a hysterical warthog-meerkat combination, they provide the energy and enthusiasm that the film's songs lack. The story of a young cub's growth to adulthood after the (parents) take note: on-screen death of his father, cannot manage. (Twin Cinema)

"The Little Rascals" (PG) Those unforgettable knee-high characters have been recast as a series of 10s. Penelope Spheeris directs the brand-new exploits of Spanky, Alfalfa, Buckwheat, Darla and the rest of the gang. (Twin Cinema, Ace Theatre)

"The Mask" (PG-13) Jim Carrey's rising stock will hit blue-chip status if this special-effects-laden action comedy, which was won't be a secret, the story of a young clerk in the story of a bank bank clerk who becomes a magical, charismatic hero when he dons an ancient mask. (Twin Cinema)

"True Lies" (R) The stunts in this Arnold Schwarzenegger epic about a secret agent whose wife is a secret of his family are once again state of the art. The film suffers from a strain of crudeness and mean-spirited humiliation, especially toward women. (R)

Summer movie flops dim luster of some bright Hollywood stars

Dallas Morning News

"Nothing's more public than a show business flop."

"Every newspaper in the country prints those weekend box-office figures," Bruce Willis said earlier this week. "I was getting groceries right after 'Hudson Hawk' opened, and the checker said, 'Jeez, I'm sorry your movie didn't even do $10 million.'"

As Willis sadly learned, there's no sounder lesson than a holiday. And in Hollywood, summertime is the biggest holiday of all. The period between Memorial Day and Labor Day either congeals into a megabucks celebration or disintegrates into a disastrous flop. And it can make or break a career (at least until next summer).

Although a probable record-breaker at the box office, this summer has brought entire constellations of Hollywood stars crashing back to reality. A year ago, no stars shone brighter than Kevin Costner, Julia Roberts and Macaulay Culkin. Today, these three — and a handful of their comrades — might have to crash into Jupiter to get the full attention of Tinseltown's telescopes.

Costner: The son of a gun, the cowboy, the man who looked like a cowboy who would audiences in "Bull Durham" and "Field of Dreams" was no where to be found in "Wyatt Earp." Kevin's is commended for "trying to stretch his range, but he should have learned from "A Perfect World" that moviegoers like his boyish smile better than his scowl." This makes two holiday strikeouts in a row for King Costner.

Eddie Murphy: The onetime box-office ruler practically begged viewers to see "Beverly Hills Cop III," with its mellow Axel Foley. But audiences didn't want to see Eddie beg or Axel chill. Will Murphy's planned remake of Jerry Lewis' "The Nutty Professor" be a career balm — or another bomb?

Julia Roberts: No matter how her movies do, she'll always make a People magazine cover. Two summers ago, she had her first big disappointment with "Dying Young." She rebounded last December with the $100 million grossing "The Pelican Brief." But "I Love Trouble" is her lowest grosser since the independent "Mystic Pizza." Julia escaped with a slap on the wrist. The most painful kick went to her co-star...

Nick Nolte: OK, when was the last time this guy sold a movie? The centerpiece of "48 HRS." was Prince Eddie, and "Down and Out in Beverly Hills" was an ensemble piece. He's had three flops this year: "I'll Do Anything," "Blue Chips" and "I Love Trouble." Not a good record for someone once pegged as the new Redford. It would be ironic if he found a niche in an artsy film, as Thomas Jefferson in Merchant-Ivory's upcoming "Jefferson."

Billy Crystal: Has the public had its feel of this guy once pegged as the new Redford. It would be ironic if he found a niche in an artsy film, as Thomas Jefferson in Merchant-Ivory's upcoming "Jefferson."

After all those interviews in which he insisted "City Slickers II" was not really a sequel, people began to wonder if he simply had played himself in the self-directed flop "Mr. Saturday Night." Next up: "Forget Paris," a romantic comedy in which he directs himself (again) with the freshly re-ascending Debra Winger.

Macaulay Culkin: Fran Lebowitz once wrote that she usually likes kids, except that all too often they're accompanied by their parents. Everyone liked Mac at first. Then, after we read nasty things about poppa Kit, everyone liked Mac on a different level, one that was tinged with sympathy. But after "Getting Even With Dad," it was easy to dislike both father and son.

Danny DeVito: He hit rock bottom as a director with "Hoffa," went nowhere as a troubled dad in "Jack the Bear" and simply marched to the clichés — in — this — summer's "Renaissance Man." A return to supporting roles is clearly in order, if his ego will permit it.

Alec Baldwin: The oldest Baldwin has flirted with stardom for years. His one major hit, "The Hunt for Red October," was attributed to Sean Connery's iconic presence. "The Shadow" was to be his breakthrough, but he was lost among the special effects and the Art Deco touches.

All too news was disheartening for Hollywood royalty. There were several fresh candidates for the cinematic heavens, while others reclaimed their thrones.

Tom Hanks: A megastar after "Philadelphia" and "Sleepless in Seattle," an uberstar after "Forrest Gump." Will he win two Oscars in a row? What if his next movie, the space odyssey "Apollo 13," flames out during re-entry? He'll just remind himself that he survived "The Bonfire of the Vanities."

Robin Wright: In "Forrest Gump," she brings humanity to a role that otherwise seemed cold and manipulative. She turned down "Batman Forever" back in the days when Michael Keaton was still attached to it. She's not a fan of mainstream moviemaking, but "Forrest" forged beyond the mainstream.

Jim Carrey: "The Mask" is what some insiders hoped "The Shadow" would be. But will Jolker Jim self-destruct? "Batman Forever" is a good career move. With co-stars like Tommy Lee Jones and Val Kilmer, he'll just be part of the ensemble. But audiences won't feel he's forcing himself on us.

Keanu Reeves: Anointing Keanu as a box-office king may be premature. Some critics felt that "Speed" sped to financial glory despite his performance, not because of it. But there's no denying that he made lots of new friends in the praised action flick.

Sandra Bullock: As "Speed's" reluctant driver, she was the character the audience could relate to. And the role allowed her to display both her warmth and her grittiness. After some false starts ("The Vanishing," "Wrestling Ernest Hemingway"), she's clearly on her way.

Elijah Wood: What's this? Little Elijah starred in one of the year's biggest flops, "North." That's right, but in a close look at those reviews. Almost every critic offered apologies to Elijah and said he was better than the movie. And the buzz is strong for his November release, "The War." For several years, the media has waned interest in new non-Culkin child stars. Wood's prophetic that Elijah replaced Mac on the Oscar show after Mac's dad fought with the producers?

And there are those who just keep shining on and on and on...

Harrison Ford: He can "open" any movie, but he's just looked at those first-weekend figures for "Clear and Present Danger." Next summer will witness his biggest challenge: a loose remake of the 1954 Audrey Hepburn romantic comedy "Sabrina." Ford will play the role created by Humphrey Bogart, who in an earlier era, might have made a perfectly good Indiana Jones.

Arnold Schwarzenegger: The star of last summer's high-profile dud "Last Action Hero" now finds himself in the most comfortable position possible. True Lies is a blockbuster, but not a monster-hit like "T2." If Arnold can just keep on hitting those nice figures in the $130-150 million range, everyone will be happy.

Jack Nicholson: Jack as werewolf. Talk about high way through-making "Wolf" was not a blockbuster, but it was a comfortable enough grosser to assure Jack-watchers that he still can bring in an audience.

Mel Gibson: "Maverick" was a hit, though not the $100-million-plus smash-shot hoped-for. And audiences beginning to suspect that beneath Mel's self-deprecating humor lies more than a trace of self-satisfaction?

Susan Sarandon: She's had a mind of her own ever since she snatched high way through-making "The Other Side of Midnight." She was perfectly cast in "The Client," which won't reach the stratosphere of Tom Cruise's "The Firm," but should come close to Roberts' "The Pelican Brief." Sarandon's next test will come Dec. 25, when "Little Women" opens. She plays "Marmee" (a la Mother) to Winona Ryder, Samantha Mathis and Trini Alvarado.

Roberts

"The Pelican Brief" But "I Love Trouble" is her lowest grosser since the independent "Mystic Pizza." Julia escaped with a slap on the wrist. The most painful kick went to her co-star...

Nick Nolte: OK, when was the last time this guy sold a movie? The centerpiece of "48 HRS." was Prince Eddie, and "Down and Out in Beverly Hills" was an ensemble piece. He's had three flops this year: "I'll Do Anything," "Blue Chips" and "I Love Trouble." Not a good record for someone once pegged as the new Redford. It would be ironic if he found a niche in an artsy film, as Thomas Jefferson in Merchant-Ivory's upcoming "Jefferson."

Billy Crystal: Has the public had its feel of this guy once pegged as the new Redford. It would be ironic if he found a niche in an artsy film, as Thomas Jefferson in Merchant-Ivory's upcoming "Jefferson."

After all those interviews in which he insisted "City Slickers II" was not really a sequel, people began to wonder if he simply had played him-

Taking stock of a grim period in rock

Nine Inch Nails, Hole releases fail to fill emotional 'Cobain' void

Los Angeles Times

Kurt Cobain's suicide last April tore the heart out of contemporary rock 'n' roll in ways that haven't begun to be repaired. One life does make a difference.

Nine Inch Nails and Hole delivered terrific, four-star albums during the past six months, but neither they nor any other release has filled the emotional void.

For all the alienation and anger in Cobain's music, Nirvana's records offered a sense of celebration and hope — even if those qualities weren't strong enough in Cobain's own life to eventually sustain him.

With Nine Inch Nails, Trent Reznor makes music that is largely without hope — an examination of despair that starts where Cobain left off. If Cobain were still alive to balance Nails with his more uplifting music, Reznor's journey into the darkness would have been compelling enough to reach a wider audience. The album, a masterpiece of the genre titled "The Downward Spiral," should have been a runaway hit.

With Cobain's death, however, the record became almost unlistenable. It remains an absorbing work, but this is a time when even the most hard-boiled fan wants some comfort — and it's not surprising that the Nine Inch Nails album has spiraled rapidly down the charts.

Hole, the Seattle quartet led by Cobain's widow, Courtney Love, has stepped into a different problem. Because she was known outside the rock underground as the notorious Mrs. Cobain than as the most talented she is, the new album was viewed with suspicion by much of the rock public. In addition, Hole's record company, DGC, was powerless to promote the album — "Live Through This," because it would have smacked of exploitation. Love was also in no condition to tour, so the band was not able to state its own case live.

Hole was dealt yet another blow in June with the death of bassist Kristen Pfaff. After just two months, the album is out of the Top 100 on the nation's charts. While the following albums stand as the 10 best works so far this year, it may be several more months before any album (Pearl Jam? Neil Young? R.E.M.), rekindles the spark and finally helps remove the black armband that continues to surround contemporary rock.

1. Nine Inch Nails, "The Downward Spiral" (Nothing/TVT/Interscope). Trent Reznor explores human emptiness and despair with chilling fearlessness in this landmark collection. "I am the pusher, I am the whore... I am the need you have for more," he snarls in one especially sobering passage that focuses on contemporary obsession and addiction. Rather than a celebration or acceptance of nihilism or decadence, the album stands as an anguished cry for something to believe in.

2. Hole, "Live Through This" (DGC). This album virtually gallops with imagination and spirit — a work that combines in its best moments the rock self-affirmation of Patti Smith with the intimacy and candor of Leonard Cohen. Though far more accessible musically than the band's 1992 debut, Hole has sacrificed none of its individuality or bite. Love's voice and words fluctuate between abrasive and caressing as she explores both matters of personal commitment and private doubt.

3. Pavement, "Crooked Rain, Crooked Rain" (Mca). There are dangers when a band reminds you of too many influences (think Counting Crows), so it may be waving a red flag to suggest that Pavement offers echoes of everyone from Lou Reed and Gram Parsons to Elliott Murphy and Thurston Moore. Yet Pavement doesn't use the influences to prop up its music.

The tracks here assert a convincing sense of youthful optimism and discovery.

4. Bikini Kill, "Pussy Whipped" (Kill Rock Stars).

Anarchy in the Northwest? This Olympia, Wash., band, with its punk defiance and feminist declarations, recalls the revolutionary command of the Sex Pistols. Like that classic British band, Bikini Kill brings together two seemingly contradictory elements (pure sonic rawness and songwriting savvy). The result is music that seems inaccessible on first listening, but ends up sticking with you like the Pistols' best.

5. Beastie Boys, "Ill Communication" (Capitol).

Eight years after proving in "Licensed to Ill" that white boys can rap, the Beasties — who combine a sort of Three Stooges goofiness with streetwise hip-hop resolve — return with another extraordinary party record. The heart of the sound is in the irresistible beats, but the talk is fun, too, touching on everything from music (Lee Dorsey and Bob Marley) to hoops (Bobby Knight and Bill Laimbeer) without missing a step.

6. Sonic Youth, "Experimental Jet Set, Torch and No Star" (DGC).

The problem with some acclaimed veterans (dare we say Elvis Costello?) is their work begins sounding labored, as if making music has become a responsibility. The wonder of these acclaimed veterans is they still make music that is joyful and alert.

7. Beck, "Mellow Gold" (DGC).

"I'm a loser, baby / So why don't you kill me" is as inspired a snarl for the '90s as Dylan's "Like a rolling stone" chorus was for the restless '60s — all the better because Beck's line can mean anything to anybody. The rest of the folk/hop union is no "Blonde on Blonde," but Beck has a quirky, questioning intelligence and spark.

8. Johnny Cash, "American Recordings" (American).

One of the cornerstones of modern pop music steps back into the creative forefront with an album that is as simple (just voice and guitar) as it is affecting — tales of sin and redemption delivered with the intimacy and urgency of someone who has learned his lessons well.

9. The Autents, "Now I'm a Cowboy" (Virgin).

Luke Haines, the suffering poet who guides this English outfit, writes about desire and doubts and bizarre relationships with the kind of sweeping sentimentality and awe that has been absent from the heart of rock since Bowie did it in the '70s.

10. Latin Playboys, "Latin Playboys" (Slash/Warner Bros.).

Los Lobos' Louie Perez and David Hidalgo join with Mitchell Froom and Tchaïd Blake for more of the experimental World Beat sounds that made "Kiko" such a soulful and spirited work. The tone is primarily playful and relaxed.

Willis bears all in latest flick; Candy reappears on screen

What's hot

To help you plan your movie-going. Hot Previews irreverently looks at coming films and what might be expected of them based on early reviews, media coverage and track records of those involved. The following are scheduled to open Friday:

"Color of Night" Who's in it: Bruce Willis, Jane March, Scott Bakula, Lesley Ann Warren What it's about: Bruce is a psychiatrist who takes over his murdered partner's therapy group and falls for one of his patients in a big way. Too bad one of the group members is a psycho killer.

Richard "The Stunt Man" Rush directs. Outlook: The trailer makes it look like the standard Hollywood mixture of sex and violent death a la "Basic Instinct," with some car chases and crashes thrown in for those who can't wait for the next "Die Hard." Willis, going fully nude (spare us), and March are supposed to be highly erotic in scenes that were recut to avoid the dreaded NC-17 rating. Looks like another sleazy role for Warren, one of a continuing series for the former TV Cinderella. Rush can be an interesting director, though he makes few movies.

"Wagons East"

Who's in it: John Candy, Richard Lewis, Ellen Greene

What it's about: Candy, in his last film role (another posthumous release is due in the fall), plays a drunken wagonmaster taking settlers who want to leave the West to go back East. Peter Markle directs. Outlook: It's doubtful movie-goers will be able to laugh much at this alleged comedy, which is said to be unfunny and inept.

ALSO: "Blankman," in which Damon Wayans plays a superhero with no super powers. Weird concept, but audiences didn't exactly line up to see the equally un-super "Meteor Man," so outlook is doubtful. Presence of Robin Givens probably not a plus.

AND: "Andrea," the family-oriented flick featuring an orphaned soul, a 9-year-old girl and a lot of good old-fashioned movie manipulation. Keith Carraidine also is in the cast.

Trent Reznor, lead singer of Nine Inch Nails performs covered in mud at Woodstock '94.

Amateur seeks separation of church, golf

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

JEROME — The question of separation of church and golf evidently will result in a lawsuit by Jerome Country Club member John Boyle against the club.

Boyle, a former professional golfer who regained his amateur status in 1975, is petitioning the court to force Jerome Country Club to allow him to compete in club tournaments on days other than Sunday.

Most tournaments have a Saturday-Sunday format because of the work demands on golfers.

While there are other arguments for and against the proposition, the battle lines obviously are being drawn along the "matter of principle."

"I feel very strongly about this," says Boyle who confirms his basis for suit is religious.

"We do not feel that his religious beliefs should override those of the other members of the club," says Jerome Men's Golf Association President Steve Hailstone. Hailstone stressed he was speaking as a private individual as he had not yet met with fellow officers.

"But it's something we have to address before this weekend because the club championship is this weekend," he added.

Boyle, who has received area recognition as a board-game inventor and also manufactured and sold a putting aid three years ago, said his early days of membership in the club were ideal.

"They allowed me to play 36 holes on Saturday instead of 18 on Saturday and 18 on Sunday. Then they just decided they weren't going to do that anymore. I know other clubs in years past had provisions for those who didn't want to play on Sunday."

"I have suggested that if they didn't want me to play 36 on Saturday, I could play the other 18 on Friday or on Monday," Boyle said.

"If that was allowed, I am not aware of it," Hailstone said.

The original decision to curtail the practice was pegged to the rules and regulations of the U.S. Golf Association which governs all play in this country. Those rules do not allow separated play.

Other Jerome competitors pointed out that Boyle and the rest of a tournament field would not be playing the same golf course.

In instances of bad weather on Friday, Saturday or Monday, Boyle would be at a disadvantage. But if Sunday brought high winds and rains, the rest of the field would be fighting uphill.

Additionally, course condition is considered paramount in golf as changes in cup placement, softness of the greens, length of fairway and greens grass, etc., play into the final equation," Boyle said.

In fact, golfers complain in situations where, due to tee-time constraints, flights are divided into morning and afternoon squads, Hailstone points out.

"I have played on Saturday and not on Sunday (without me) just to show them I was serious," Boyle said.

Boyle said he's had several conversations with club officials over the past couple of years and been rebuffed on every suggestion.

"I have told them that if there was no other way to get their attention, I will file suit," he said.

He has hired attorney Jeff Stoker to represent him.

"They have 30 days to respond," said Boyle.

History shows Schaal should be successful

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — If he can just keep his history intact, incoming Twin Falls high school football Coach Mark Schaal should have a successful career.

Schaal's history is deeply interwoven in Southern Idaho and Magic Valley football both as a player and a coach.

He comes to the Bruin helm after spending seven years with his high school coach in Buhl — Jon Jund. He was an integral part of the building that gave Twin Falls five consecutive winning years — and that's a high for a few decades.

Schaal (pronounced shaw) first came into Magic Valley football prominence as a sophomore starter in the Buhl Indian backfield. As a player, he helped the Indians into the state playoffs three times and the state finals twice.

He opted for Boise State and saw that string continue when the Broncos won the NCAA division I-AA championship his freshman year.

After graduation, Schaal spent a year each at Nez Perce and Boise high schools before rejoining Jund's program in Twin Falls.

But Schaal and his staff are making their debut in a rather tough situation. Of the 22 starters from last year, 16 graduated and two more decided not to turn out for the team as seniors this fall. One of the largest high schools in the state has mustered just 40 juniors and seniors.

He understands, however, that "society has changed. Right now football practice is probably the hardest work they've been put through. When I was playing at Buhl, football practice was probably a break from the tougher work of picking rock or lifting bales."

Applying those facts to his own player experience, Schaal can't fathom a starting junior declining to play as a senior.

"Everyone loses some to graduations. That's part of the game. I could understand better a player not coming out as a senior if he didn't expect to play a lot. But junior starters that used up that experience for a whole year and won't come out as seniors — that really hurts," he said.

Schaal is aware that even with a full complement returning, the way wouldn't have been easy.

Last year we had three players being recruited by (NCAA) Division I teams," Schaal said. "In Idaho, having three major prospects is quite an accomplishment. That kind of talent is very hard to replace."

No matter how one prepares himself for a head coaching job, some of the minutiae are overwhelming simply due to the attention they command.

"All the paper work and the administration end of what has to be done to satisfy state and district rules demand more time than I expected," he said. "And as an assistant you don't have to worry about whether they're watering the field or planning to mow it at the same time you've scheduled practice."

Feds to supervise talks to end baseball strike

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A glimmer of hope, baseball fans. Both sides will talk to each other next week — and with owners at the bargaining table.

Federal mediators said Thursday that talks to end the strike will resume under their supervision. A five-man delegation of owners, including some from large, medium and small markets, will go the table along with Richard Ravitch, management's negotiator since bargaining began 19 months ago.

"It's a positive sign," union head Donald Fehr said cautiously. "I don't know if anyone should be optimistic. It depends on whether there's a change of substance along with it."

The strike, baseball's second-longest in terms of canceled games, completed its first week Thursday, wiping out 12 more games to raise the total to 86.

Ravitch, hired three years ago with the mission of getting a salary cap for teams, had maintained the decision to keep owners away from the table was made by owners themselves. But last week, George Steinbrenner of the New York Yankees and Jerry McMorris of the Colorado Rockies said owners should join the talks.

"I think it's a healthy sign and one which will advance the negotiations at this point,"

Ballplayers lose $4.4 million daily; clubs lose $8.5 million

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Baseball players are losing $4.4 million daily during their strike, about half the approximately $8.5 million lost by clubs each day, according to a study by The Associated Press.

If the walkout continues for the rest of the season, players will lose $230 million in salary, according to a review of the contracts of 762 players on strike.

Clubs figure to lose about $440 million if the final 52 days of the season aren't played. If the playoffs and World Series aren't played, another $140 million in broadcast revenue would be lost, raising the total of lost revenue to about $580 million, approximately one-third the industry's projected $1.8 billion revenue in 1994.

Players already have received about 75 percent of their income, including signing bonuses. The study calculated the daily loss to players at $4,417,411, an average of $5,797 per player per day.

One hundred eighty-six players are losing $10,000 a day or more, topped by the $31,148 lost each day by New York Mets first baseman Bobby Bonilla. There are 35 players losing $20,000 or more each day.

Sun Valley Co. to build new golf course, hotel

By Barb Neiwert
Times-News correspondent

SUN VALLEY — Plans for a new 18-hole championship golf course were announced Thursday by the Sun Valley Co.

Trying to position themselves as the "premier golf resort of the Rockies," Sun Valley Co. officials said the new links will have minimal environmental impact yet will provide the highest caliber of recreational amenities for resort guests and the public.

Sun Valley Co. General Manager Wallace Huffman also announced plans for a new Sun Valley hotel and convention center near the Sun Valley Lodge.

The new course, as of yet unnamed, will be built on 350 acres of ground seven miles south of Sun Valley resort adjacent to Highway 75 on acreage known as The Golden Eagle Ranch at the mouth of Greenhorn Gulch.

Prominent golf course architect Jay Morrish is in charge of designing the course. Courses of the award-winning Morrish has designed include Forest Highlands in Flagstaff, Ariz., and the Broken Top in Bend, Ore.

Huffman said Morrish was selected over Robert Trent Jones, Jr. who designed the present Sun Valley Golf Course and Elkhorn Golf Course, to give the new course a different stance for marketing and sales purposes.

The new course, set along the Big Wood River and Smokey Mountains, will provide a natural golf venue on natural terrain, Huffman said.

The plans for development at the Golden Eagle Ranch are the result of a joint venture between Sun Valley Co. and property owner Harry Rinker.

While Sun Valley Co. will own the land for the golf course, develop and control it, land developer Rinker will be responsible for the design, control and sale of between 100 to 125 homesites surrounding the greens and fairways.

Unlike the private golf course and homes of the Valley Ranch which is under construction just south of this location, the Sun Valley course will be semi-public.

Huffman said the course will operate in the same manner as the current course does, giving Sun Valley lodging guests and Golden Eagle Ranch lot owners first priority for tee times.

The cost to play the course will be similar to that already charged at Sun Valley and Elkhorn.

BEVERLY, Mass. (AP) — Jack Sharkey, the oldest surviving professional fighter, died Wednesday at the age of 91.

Sharkey fought in boxing's golden era, logging 55 professional fights against such opponents as Joe Louis, Jack Dempsey, Tommy Loughran, Max Schmeling and Primo Carner. His career record was 38-13-3 with one no-decision.

He won the championship June 21-1932 in a 15-round decision against Schmeling, and lost it to Carner the following year.

But the fight Sharkey never tired of recounting was his July 21, 1927 bout at Yankee Stadium against Dempsey, which he lost.

"I turned to the referee to complain I was getting hit low and I got hit with a haymaker," Sharkey remembered later. "That was that."

Dempsey was at the end of his career, although he fought one more fight, losing to Gene Tunney in an effort to regain the heavyweight crown.

"I came out of a fight with Dempsey full of welts and bruises and every bone aching," Sharkey said when Dempsey died May 31, 1993.

In a comeback of his own at 34, Sharkey fought Joe Louis on Aug.

"Louis? A great fighter and a great hitter," he said. "But he was a methodical, punishing type of boxer who built up to a terrific explosion."

After his defeat to Louis, Sharkey retired from the ring to open a restaurant in Boston.

Taylor, Undhjem win tourney

TWIN FALLS — Jerome's Terrie Taylor and Virginia Undhjem of Twin Falls combined for a four-under par 68 and easy victory in the Twin Falls Municipal two-woman best ball tournament Thursday.

Undhjem and Taylor won with six shots to spare over Chris Sterling and K. Sanders in the group division. Maggie Ruppert and Wilma Shockey and Jackie Gasser and Charlotte Brunella shared third at 76.

Lietzke plays better after rest

CASTLE ROCK, Colo. (AP) — So much for playing every day and practicing until your hands bleed.

Returning to the PGA Tour after an 11-week layoff, Bruce Lietzke played as if he had never been gone. Better, in fact.

Lietzke eased into a familiar position in the International, scoring 16 points Thursday to claim the first-round victory. The 29-year-old contender who is third in tournament history in points produced, Lietzke had an eagle, six birdies and a single bogey to move two points ahead of his nearest competitor, Mike Reid.

Under the modified Stableford scoring system used in this event, a golfer receives 8 points for a double eagle, 5 for eagle, 2 for birdie, zero for par, minus-1 for bogey and minus-3 for double bogey or worse. Medal scores don't count.

Points are cumulative over the four

In the net division, Kathy Janson and Mary Farnell ended a 58 to 59 tie. Linda Rockne and D. Dougherty by a stroke. N. Kemper and Vi Young were third at 60.

First flight gross winners were Jenna Brauer and P. Lee at 87. They were followed by L. Hash and D. Pierce at 90 and D.J. Stanley and Sharon Allen at 91.

In net, D. Packard and L. Cleland had a 57 while R. Reese and C. Freeman had 58 and Ruth Sonius and G. Rowe had 62.

rounds, with the 144-player field being reduced to 72 for the third round and to 24 for the final round.

Returning to the PGA Tour after an 11-week layoff, Bruce Lietzke played as if he had never been gone. Better, in fact.

Lietzke started at No. 10 and birdied five holes on the back nine before reaching the par-5, 644-yard No. 1 hole in two and making a 30-foot putt for eagle. That gave him 15 points. He bogeyed No. 2 after driving into a hazard, but got to plus-16 with a birdie at the par-5 eighth hole, when he hit a sand wedge to four feet.

His steady iron play consistently moved him five holes in the 20-foot range. "I made a couple of them and two-putted the rest," he said.

Lietzke, 43, barely completed his round before play was suspended for 1 hour, 20 minutes at midday by lightning.

Regent: Former UNLV head lied about contract

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Former UNLV president Robert Massimo lied when he told university regents that a $511,000 annual contract was all that was promised. Regent Massimo said he was told the university would not pay him nearly $2 million secretly promised him by former university officials who lured him from Villanova two years ago.

University officials who lured him from Villanova two years ago.

UNLV interim president Kenny Guinn said that because the contract was never approved by the Board of Regents as required by law, Massimo is not entitled to the extra money.

Massimo, who is out of town and has been unavailable for comment, will have to decide whether to take legal action to try and get the university to pay the money, Guinn said.

With the starting game still two weeks away, Schaal and his staff are still deep in team evaluation. They go into paid today and will have their first intra-squad scrimmage about 10:15 a.m. Saturday.

"We'll use that as our first evaluation to see where we need to make any moves to solidify positions," he said.

Schaal

From a philosophical standpoint, Schaal tells Bruin fans not to expect a lot of major change.

"Jon had a lot of influence on me and three or four others who are still on the staff. Through the last three years we had a good number of experienced players returning. This year we basically have a completely different set of kids. So while we'll be in the structure of the past few years, the talents of the individuals will require some changes in the schematics on offense and defense."

Schaal said the emphasis continues to be academics, noting the better a player's grades, the better he performs on the field.

Faked gunshot still echoes

By Jim Litke
The Associated Press

LIBERTYVILLE, Ill. — For 28 years, his life and his work were the same thing. Up until the moment he heard the living daylights out of the very kids he was trying to reach, David Christensen was a high school football coach.

For 28 years, his seasons and his days had a deliberate, practiced rhythm to them. From August to December, he rose at 4 a.m., read from the Scriptures, and was in his office by 5. He left when it was dark outside again. In between, he taught Xs and Os and other lessons he deemed important to hundreds of kids about-to-become young men.

Last November, one of those lessons went too far.

At a pep rally in the school cafeteria, just hours before Libertyville High would lose a crucial state Class 6A semifinal game to Loyola University, Christensen staged his own shooting.

Moments after he broke up a staged fight between two students, one of them returned and fired what was later found to be a starter's pistol. On cue, Christensen fell to the ground, spilling fake blood in full view of his coaches and his team. One of those players was his own son.

The lesson he says he was trying to impart that day was, oddly enough, love. Love of family, love of friends, but especially love of teammates. But it is only the fake gunshot that echoes nine months later.

Commentary

It is the reason that this August morning, as the noon sun punishes the Wildcat players going through two-a-day practices nearby, Christensen sits at the kitchen table in his home and somebody else sits behind his desk at the school.

He still rises early, will still teach at the school when it opens in a few days and still plans to get back into coaching. For now, though, he is adjusting to something else.

"One word to sum the whole experience up?" Christensen mused. "Indignation."

"Not long after it happened, one guy at my church got up and said I shouldn't be allowed anywhere around kids," Christensen said, slowly shaking his head.

"Everything I was teaching these kids lead up to that lesson in a sense. I can understand now what I must have looked like. And what I did was plenty damned dumb — I recognize that. But I was inspired by the end, not the means."

And so Christensen is indignant, not just that he was forced out of his job at Libertyville after 25 seasons as a head coach and assistant, but that all the critics who jumped him after the story gained national attention wouldn't take the time to figure him out.

After all, Christensen noted this day, people who knew him understood him the moment the shock wore off. His players who jumped him after the story gained national attention wouldn't take the time to figure him out.

cause, and stacked in a corner are hundreds of letters of support he's received from all over the country.

"I try to make a little time each day to answer them," he said. "I thank them and tell them that what's important is the message — not the messenger."

When the story first broke, the coach most people linked Christensen with was Jackie Sherrill who, trying to get his Mississippi State players psyched up for a match against the Texas Longhorns, once had a bull brought onto the practice field and castrated.

Like Sherrill, Christensen's bizarre play may have earned him a spot in the Motivational Hall of Shame. But he has much more in common with Bill McCartney, the Colorado coach who wears his religion and his traditional values on his sweater. Like McCartney, Christensen sees himself as a crusader willing to get into whatever scrapes those beliefs may carry him.

Largely because he believes he will win. Eventually.

"It's like I tried to teach the kids," he said. "The challenge is not winning football games 40-0. It's reaching down inside yourself and coming up with a way to stuff the other team at that moment late in the game when you've just fumbled and you're protecting a three-point lead."

"Going through this turbulence isn't any fun, believe me. But I'll be stronger and better for the experience and," he paused, "I'll prosper from it as well."

Patriots turn over Redskins

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — The New England Patriots, continuing to turn turnovers into touchdowns, scored 24 points in the fourth quarter Thursday night to beat the Washington Redskins 27-17.

The Patriots turned a pair of fumbles into two quick touchdowns, the first a 15-yard run by Corey Crook and the second a 22-yard pass from backup QB Walker to Steve Hawkins, to take a 24-10 lead.

New England had tied the game at 10 early in the fourth on a 5-yard pass from Drew Bledsoe to Elroy Haskins, a free safety in college who was making his NFL debut.

Matt Bahr added field goals of 32 and 28 yards for the Patriots, who are 3-0 in the preseason for the first time since 1986.

The Redskins' 27-17 preseason under new coach Tom Turner, scored on a 48-yard fumble return by linebacker Ken Harvey, a 15-yard pass from Gus Frerotte to Waltham Bell and a 33-yard field goal by Chip Lohmiller.

Heath Shuler, the third pick in this spring's draft, played most of the second half for the Redskins. Playing against New England's first-string defense for much of his stint, the former Tennessee star completed 5-of-8 passes for 38 yards and led Washington to a field goal.

Shuler, who missed the first two weeks of camp because of a knee injury, threw for 184 yards and three touchdowns in eight games and 519 yards with 10 touchdowns in 1993.

Bledsoe, who played much of the fourth period, was 16-of-27 for 154 yards with an interception.

The Patriots got another three take-aways against Washington, and now have recovered eight fumbles and intercepted three passes during the preseason. Seven of New England's take-aways have led to touchdowns.

Harvey opened the scoring early in the second quarter with a 33-yard field goal, and the Patriots held the ball for nearly 20 minutes in the first half.

But Harvey, who signed with the Redskins as a free agent from the Arizona Cardinals this spring, sacked Bledsoe and forced a fumble with 1:47 left in the half and returned the ball for a touchdown. It was the Patriots' first turnover this preseason.

New England Patriots' Ben Coates blocks Washington Redskins linebacker Ken Harvey for Patriots' running back Leroy Thompson during the first quarter in Foxboro, Mass., Thursday.

Lohmiller increased Washington's lead to 10-3 in the third quarter, but the final period belonged to the Patriots. Hawkins' first touchdown reception finished off a 16-play, 77-yard drive that lasted 8:41.

Three plays after a fumble recovery, Crook ran through a big hole in the line and broke a tackle on his touchdown run. On the first play after another fumble recovery, the 6-foot-5 Hawkins reached over a defender in the corner of the end zone for the score.

Chicago's United Center opens for business

CHICAGO (AP) — Across the street as workers dutifully cart away the essentials, Chicago Stadium is being stripped of everything but the memories. Time goes on and a new building, mere steps away and full of modern amenities, has taken its place.

The United Center, prodigious and imposing, is open for business.

"Notwithstanding all the wonderful memories we had there, they will certainly be transferred to this building," Chicago Blackhawks owner William Wirtz promised Thursday.

Wirtz boasted that $175 million new home of the Chicago Bulls and Blackhawks and the 1996 Democratic National Convention is "not only the greatest building in the United States and North America, but in the world."

Much like the old building, there were red seats and loud organ music — "Happy Days Are Here Again" was one selection — when the building opened for a Thursday and got ready for its first official event, a political fundraiser.

But unlike Chicago Stadium, which opened in 1929 at a cost of $7 million, there are luxury suites galore in the privately financed facility that encompasses 950,000 square feet.

There are 216 luxury suites at 12 different price levels, and the top price for a suite is $175,000, said Terry Savaris, the senior vice president of operations.

"The suites are really the financial engine that drove the development of the United Center," Bulls chairman Jerry Reinsdorf said.

The first official sporting event won't feature Reinsdorf's Bulls or

Wirtz's Blackhawks.

People will be able to watch Headliners, Bam Bam Bigelow, Razor Ramon and Alundra Blaze, wrestlers who will be body slamming during the first "sports" event later this month.

There will be jamming, too, because arena will have 25,000 seats for concerts, 5,000 more than the stadium.

Seating for basketball will be 21,500 compared to 17,339 for the stadium. Some 20,500 can be seated for hockey games, compared to 17,317 for the venerable "Madhouse on Madison," known for its ear-splitting cheers, especially during the National Anthem.

There are 50 restrooms in the new building, compared to only 16 in the old one. And there will be 16 concession stands to 27 at the old stadium.

Fans will be able to ride taller than climb steps. The United Center has eight escalators and nine elevators, compared to none across the street.

Texas A&M coach turns negatives into positives

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum considers it a compliment when other coaches use negative recruiting tactics.

Using that definition, the Aggies got plenty of compliments during the most recent recruiting season, the first time being placed on NCAA probation for five years in January.

"That didn't stop the Aggies from having one of their best recruiting seasons ever, just as no one has been able to keep A&M from winning a record 22 straight Southeastern Conference games and the last three league titles."

"After a while (recruits) felt like if the other schools were so concerned about Texas A&M, obviously something must be going on pretty good there," Slocum said.

He also plans to use the same turn-around-into-a-positive philosophy to deal with the other major changes facing the Aggies this season.

The biggest is that A&M can't claim a fourth straight title because of the NCAA punishment. The Aggies also are banned from television during the season because players got paid for work they didn't perform on summer jobs.

On the field, A&M has new offensive and defensive coordinators, five other new assistant coaches, six new offensive starters and eight new starters on defense. Three of the departed players were first-round picks in the NFL draft.

"I think losing the players and coaches has created some excitement on the team," Slocum said. "There are more players who realize they have a chance to play. I know that I'm as motivated as I've ever been."

In recent years, the Aggies have tried to diversify their offense to include more passing. Each year, they've had to fall back on their potent running game to survive.

"This year, though, they've brought in Steve Ensminger from Georgia to become the new offensive coordinator in hopes of adding passing zip."

"We'd just like to throw better," Slocum said. "I want you to be more unpredictable on first down."

Quarterback Corey Pullis has had his passing woes, but Slocum expects dramatic improvement in his junior season.

"I thought Corey had a good spring," Slocum said. "You look at Corey's two Cotton Bowls ago and last spring he was a lot better."

Although running back Greg Hill left school and became the No. 1 draft pick of the Kansas City Chiefs, the Aggies never seem short on running backs.

A&M has one of the country's best backfield tandems in senior Rodney Thomas and sophomore Leland McElroy. But they'll be running behind an offensive line that retains only one starter, Calvin Collins, and he's been moved from guard to center.

"With only one lineman returning, that's a bunch to lose," Slocum said. "That really concerns me."

Male flight attendant sues Cowboys for discrimination

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys and American Airlines have conspired to allow only young female flight attendants to work the team's charter to road games, a male attendant contends in a lawsuit filed Thursday in federal court.

Jay Mauk, an 11-year veteran of American, claims the team and the airline have discriminated against males, gay males and females over the age of 45 by keeping them off the flights.

He's seeking unspecified damages and the chance to work the flights, which are coveted assignments because attendants receive perks such as bonus pay and tickets to the game to which they're flying.

"We allege it's a conspiracy in the sense that the Cowboys are asking American to commit an illegal act and American is going along with it," attorney Marsha Halpern said.

"If in fact men have historically been not been allowed to fly these flights then it is illegal — completely."

American spokeswoman Lauren Dailey refuted Mauk's claim by saying males have worked Cowboys charters as recently as last season.

"There have been other male flight attendants assigned to Cowboys charters," she said. "They've already gone back and checked."

Round-the-clock repairs to Kingdome put on hold

SEATTLE (AP) — Round-the-clock scrambling to repair the Kingdome was put on hold Thursday by an investigation of the deaths of two workers in a crane accident at the stadium.

"Two people have died. I am not concerned about the Seahawks and the Mariners and about an opening game," King County Executive Gary Brown said during a news conference.

A failed cable may have caused the accident, said Mark O. Brown, director of the state Department of Labor and Industries, which is investigating the deaths with King County police.

"On a preliminary basis, it appears that cable failure is at the heart of this tragedy. ... But we don't know what's at the heart of the cable failure," Brown said during a news conference near Olympia.

It wasn't clear how long the investigation at the site would take, Brown said.

"We won't be rushed in this investigation by any outside forces. There are no timelines," he said. "We're not going to allow work to resume until we feel sure that no one else is at risk."

Round-the-clock repairs to Kingdome put on hold

"How long that will take, we don't know. It could be a matter of a few hours, or it could be a matter of a few days. It's totally dependent on what our investigators find."

Wednesday's accident, which killed two men and injured one, likely will change plans for the Kingdome by Sept. 18, date of the Seahawks' NFL home opener against San Diego. The team also scheduled a news conference Thursday.

"We're going to remain flexible at this point," Seahawks president Dan Belton said Thursday at team headquarters.

The Mariners have been on an extended road trip since acoustical ceiling tiles crashed into the Kingdome stands hours before a July 19 game against Baltimore.

Officials for the county, which operates the dome, determined all of the tiles had to be removed. That work had been completed and workers Wednesday had begun sandblasting and painting the dome ceiling.

Germany nabs cycling world team pursuit title

PALERMO, Sicily (AP) — Germany won its second world team pursuit title in three years Thursday night as the United States quartet failed to produce consecutive wonders.

The American cyclists, who upset defending champion Australia by 0.027 seconds in the semifinals, could not repeat that sensational showing in the final and lost to the Germans by nearly 2 seconds at Palermo Velodrome.

The German team of Andreas Bach, Guido Fulst, Danilo Hondo and Jens Lehmann led throughout the 2.48 miles and finished in 4 minutes, 15.668 seconds, an average speed of 34.971 mph. Carl Sundquist of Miami, Mariano Friedrick of Santa Monica, Calif., Adam Laurent of Goleta, Calif., and Dirk Copeland, of San Diego settled for silver in 4:17.372.

It was the best finish by an American quartet in the 32-year history of team pursuit in the World Track Cycling Championships.

Thursday's silver increased the American medal haul to four — one gold, two silver, one bronze — and kept the United States in second place behind France, which has two gold and two silver.

Australia finished third in the pursuit and also missed another gold medal chance in the women's sprint.

Lucy Tyler was fourth after losing consecutive semifinal sprints to France's Felicia Ballanger.

Ballanger then lost two of three to Russian Galina Erukina in the final series.

The Russian cyclist gained the title that had been held by Canada's Tanya Dubnicoff, who was eliminated in the quarterfinals.

Two world titles for tandem and the women's point race are to be awarded today.

Skier Moe will promote Jackson Hole ski resorts

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — Olympic downhill champion Tommy Moe has agreed to become a "special ambassador" for ski resorts in the Jackson Hole area.

Moe announced Thursday that he signed a four-year, $60,000-a-year contract that stipulates he only has to work in Jackson Hole 14 days a year. Moe was heavily courted by Rocky Mountain ski resorts since the 1994 Winter Olympics ended. On top of Rendezvous Mountain at the Jackson Hole Ski Resort, the downhill gold medalist and super-G silver medalist said Jackson Hole offered half of what other areas proposed, but he still was attracted to the northwestern Wyoming resort area.

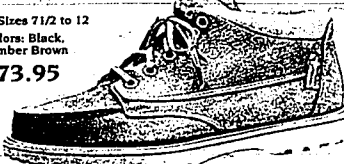

"I came here in June and really like it here," Moe said. "There were a lot of people with kayaks on their cars, and I saw there was good mountain biking, good hiking and good fishing. That's important to me."

"I like getting out and enjoying the out-of-doors and not staying in one place all the time."

Group bids on Texas speedway

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — A group believed to involve NASCAR's Winston Cup team owner Richard Childress made an offer financially troubled Texas World Speedway, prompting auctioneers to scrap a public auction Thursday for the two-mile high-banked track.

Officials of National Auction Group Inc., which was to have conducted the speedway sale, would not deny they were negotiating with representatives of Childress, owner of the NASCAR Winston Cup team featuring driver Dale Earnhardt.

Earnhardt has won six Winston Cup titles for the Childress racing team and is the leader in points this season.

At least four people representing Childress Racing Enterprises Inc. showed up for Thursday's auction and were hustled into a private room at the speedway as time for the public auction approached.

About 90 minutes later, auction organizers announced there would be no public sale and that the single bidder was locked in talks involving representatives of the track owner, bankers and lawyers.

"It is a group that is active and interested in auto racing," Peter Engle, a spokesman for National Auction Group, said. "When this is worked out, it will be worked out as a viable motor-racing operation. It's something they're serious about. It's going to take some time."

Contract talks between NHL, players stall

TORONTO (AP) — Contract talks between the NHL and its players were nowhere Thursday, but players say training camps will open in less than three weeks despite their differences.

A six-man delegation led by NHL commissioner Gary Bettman met for three hours with members of the NHL Players Association bargaining committee, led by executive director Bob Goodenow, at a downtown hotel.

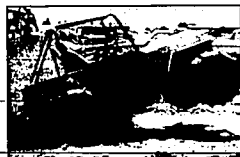

Both sides emerged from their first collective bargaining meeting in five months to say nothing of substance was accomplished.

We did not make as much progress as I would have hoped," Bettman said. "It was a very small step in terms of the substance."

The players, who have been without a contract since last September, are unhappy with Bettman threatening them with $20 million in contract roll-backs. They've accused Bettman of economic warfare for making them pay for such things as medical insurance, paying their way to training camp and eliminating the $54 per diem allowance for training camp and the regular season.

The NHLPA is looking into picking up the tab for the medical insurance, as it did during the 10-day strike in 1992, but the transportation and meal allowance will come out of the players' pockets.

Student's photographs may save ancient Redwoods

The Associated Press

SCOTIA, Calif. — Deep in an ancient forest where ocean fog drapes rugged peaks, Doug Thron discovered a horror he felt would shock America.

Sneaking past "No Trespassing" signs, diving into the bushes when he heard the rumble of approaching logging trucks, the college student took photographs. Hundreds of photographs.

Then he abandoned his senior year and took to the road with a devastating slide show of ugly bare patches where loggers had cut down stand after stand of old-growth redwood trees, some as old as 2,000 years.

Over recent decades, more than 90 percent of the rare giants had fallen, as if some huge, Bunyanesque ax had been swung with abandon — 30 acres here, 80 acres there.

"Like most people in America, I didn't know they were cutting ancient redwoods. I was shocked," Thron said. "If people had known, it would have been stopped a long time ago."

One night, Thron's audience included Rep. Dan Hamburg, a freshman Democrat from Northern California. Hamburg promptly wrote a bill that would authorize federal purchase and preservation of the remaining 3,000 acres of majestic redwoods in the Headwaters Forest on California's remote north coast.

"There is no way you could see this slide show and not be very affected," Hamburg said.

The bill, which has more than 140 cosponsors and the support of the Clinton administration, is expected to come to a vote this month. If passed, it will cap a remarkable one-man campaign against this harvest of ancient redwoods.

Climate-sensitive redwoods are found only in southern Oregon and northern California, where extensive stands are preserved in several California parks and in Redwood National Park.

But some redwoods are held by timber companies, such as Pacific Lumber Co., which routinely harvest second- and third-growth trees for such uses as decks and picnic tables, or by private owners. In one private stand along U.S. 101, tourists can drive, for a fee, through a tunnel carved through a giant redwood.

In the Headwaters Forest 200 miles northwest of San Francisco, young redwoods are growing back in the older clear-cuts. Some already stretch 100 feet high. But the forest remains scarred, its streams still thick with silt. And the ancient trees, the ones that were saplings around the time of Christ, are gone forever.

These are the redwoods Thron wants to save, the ones that soar 300 feet from the forest floor. Pacific Lumber tried to stop him, demanded his photographs, even threatened to file trespassing charges. The company has since backed off and is awaiting action on Hamburg's bill, said spokeswoman Mary By Binkley.

As a student at Humboldt State University in nearby Arcata, working part-time at a gas station, Thron became curious about the steady stream of logging trucks.

He began sneaking into the forest in 1992, taking his camera along. Impassioned by what he became a crusade, he left school and with his fiancée, Lucy, now his wife, drove around the country in a battered old car to show their slides. They wandered as far as New York, Ohio and Florida.

The U.S. Forest Service estimates the value of the timber on the 3,000 acres covered by Hamburg's bill at a minimum of $500 million. The measure would also allow the government to buy an additional 41,000 acres of surrounding forest. Although Pacific Lumber would not be required to sell any land against its will, it opposes that aspect. The 125-year-old company says it would shut down without the lumber from tens of thousands of acres of the 195,000 acres it owns in Humboldt County.

Thron, 24, is no hero in Scotia, the nearby company-owned town of 1,200 people that depends on the forest. The lumber mill provides 1,300 jobs in a region battered by timber setbacks.

"People are mad at Doug. He's not an expert on forestry, though he's trying to represent himself as that," said company spokesman David Galitz.

Above, Doug Thron, 24, demonstrates in Laytonville, Calif., how he climbed a fence surrounding the Headwaters Forest in Scotia, Calif., to photograph harvesting of redwoods. Thron, of Arcata, Calif., has led a one-man crusade against the harvesting of old-growth redwood trees. At right, a private land owner charges tourists to drive through one of the giant trees near Scotia, Calif. Environmentalists have denounced this treatment of the trees. At far right, David Galitz, of Pacific Lumber Company, is surrounded by redwoods in Headwaters Forest. He says the company has properly managed the forest, which is under consideration for purchase by the federal government. Environmentalists say timber companies have harvested nearly all the redwoods.

Pacific Lumber, having weathered years of confrontation with environmental groups, says it suspects Thron has been financed by the more extreme groups.

Thron brushes aside the accusation. He acknowledges taking small donations from environmental groups but says that his work is his own and that he brings in enough income doing handyman jobs.

Although the fate of the Headwaters Forest remains uncertain, Thron says his work will not be over when the issue is decided.

Presidential vote a key test in state where rebellion smolders

The Associated Press

SAN CRISTOBAL DE LAS CASAS, Mexico — Chiapas was a near-forgotten state before a peasant uprising.

But Sunday's presidential vote will be critical to a national democracy movement and the rebels who inspired it.

Called by Mayan Indian fighters for clean elections rattled the nation's conscience and have been taken up by an opposition candidate for Chiapas governor, Amado Avendano.

Chiapas is the only state holding a gubernatorial election coinciding with the presidential vote and tensions have been raised by warnings the rebels could restart their war in the event of fraud.

The ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, has traditionally won more than 90 percent of the vote in the southern state, but rebellion makes the depth of that support suspect.

"Imagine what a catastrophe it would be if the PRI wins in the Zapotec zone," said Fernando Michel, a member of a peace coalition setting up ballot boxes in rebel territory under an agreement between the government and rebels.

A Jan. 1 rebellion by the Zapatista National Liberation Army helped galvanize a national movement to end the world's oldest single-party system: 65 years of uninterrupted PRI government.

The elections that have kept the PRI in power often have been tainted by fraud, and the government is promising a clean ballot this time. However, a leading poll-watching coalition complained Wednesday that the Federal Electoral Institute has certified just 1,200 of the 13,000 proposed election observers.

On Wednesday, the rebels announced they would allow unimpeded voting in their territory by withdrawing from around mountain villages to permit the "free transit of all during the elections."

But they vow they won't lay down arms until Mexico becomes democratic, their rebellion on hold from a 12-day war in January that cost 145 lives.

Avendano, gubernatorial candidate of the left-leaning Democratic Revolution Party, insists his is a non-partisan campaign.

"What we are trying to do is make Chiapas a model for all of Mexico," said his wife Concepcion Villafuerte, who has campaigned for Avendano since he was injured in a suspicious highway crash July 25.

"The demands of the Zapatistas have a national consensus," she added.

Avendano also has joined forces with the Democratic National Convention, a national grouping of 5,000 political activists who met in rebel territory this month under Zapatista invitation.

"If the opposition wins, the convention could become a big force" for democracy, said historian Antonio Garcia de Leon of the National Autonomous University of Mexico.

Zapatista arms and Avendano's campaign have forced the PRI to adapt its rhetoric even if electoral practices appear unchanged.

In Tenejapa, a village 14 miles northeast of here, about 1,000 Indians were brought in by PRI-affiliated bus companies to a rally for the ruling party candidate, Eduardo Robledo Rincon.

Women wearing ribbons in their black braids and thickly embroidered blouses clung to one another as they lined up for free tamales and cups of Coca-Cola.

A barefoot woman who gave her name as Raquia could not say what the PRI had done for her, but said she would vote for Rincon anyway: "They watch us when we vote."

Robledo, a 47-year-old federal senator who began his party career as a rural organizer in Chiapas, said his party never change. "We have learned the lesson of Jan. 1," Robledo said. "We have to turn our backs on a path that has brought us to war."

He is promising a "new social pact" of judicial, legal and social reforms originally demanded by the rebels.

The PRI-dominated government responded to the uprising by vastly increasing state spending and by promising political reforms its says would give Indians a greater voice in government.

But the Zapatistas say they want more: a new, more democratic constitution for all Mexico.

Avendano, 60, is a lawyer and co-publisher of the small daily Tiempo here, which was the first to report of the Zapatista uprising.

He is recuperating from the crash, which occurred on a remote stretch of coastal highway, killing his wife's nephew and two campaign workers.

PRI officials called the collision with a truck a "lamentable accident" while the campaign called it a political attack.

Villafuerte spoke at a rally in the small hillside town of Venustiano Carranza, 60 miles southeast of here. She echoed Zapatista calls for a transitional government and new constitution.

Magazines give N.C. metro area top rankings

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Fortune came to Raleigh-Durham first, then Money.

The metropolitan area in central North Carolina is the current favorite for list-loving glossy business magazines.

Crowned the best metro area to do business by Fortune this spring, Raleigh-Durham turned up at the top of Money's "Best Places to Live in America," published in the September issue distributed Wednesday.

"This is a rare double for a city," Raleigh Mayor Tom Fetz said. "It's an opportunity we really need to take advantage of."

Despite the unscientific nature of magazine lists, Fetz knows they have tremendous public relations value. He's already got plans for a print and campaign to boast of the No. 1 status.

Raleigh-Durham, with 882,000 residents in the east-central part of the state, placed well in the economic, housing, education and health categories. The region has an unemployment rate of just 3 percent, several large medical centers and three large universities — Duke, North Carolina and North Carolina State.

Because Money changes the criteria for the list based on a yearly survey of readers' interests, the positions of cities can change wildly.

While Rochester, Minn., was bumped from No. 1 to No. 2, Kenosha, Wis., plunged from 25 to 261.

Kenosha was "knocked because of commuting time." But it was still 2 minutes below the national average, said Lou Micheln, director of the Kenosha Chamber of Commerce.

At the bottom of the list in the No. 300 slot was Jackson, Mich. The city of 150,000 in southeastern Michigan fared poorly in part because it is home to the state's largest prison. Crime inside its walls is recorded as crime in Jackson. Jackson was No. 277 last year.

The magazine said its readers this year were most interested in low crime, clean air and water, good health care, strong government and low taxes. They were less interested in good schools, low housing prices, ski areas and proximity to major league sports than they were a year ago.

Raleigh-Durham, with 882,000 residents in the east-central part of (North Carolina), placed well in the economic, housing, education and health categories.

Record exports trim U.S. trade deficit in June

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Record exports helped trim America's trade deficit slightly in June, despite the biggest monthly purchase of foreign oil.

However, the improvement did little to change predictions of the second worst merchandise trade gap ever this year.

Exports, led by sales of aircraft and telecommunications equipment, were up 3.6 percent from May, to $58.17 billion, the Commerce Department reported Thursday. Imports rose 2.8 percent, to $67.54 billion, with nearly half the increase due to crude oil purchases.

The result was a 1.6 percent dip in the overall deficit in goods and services, to $9.37 billion, after an 11.6 percent jump in May.

But the merchandise trade gap itself was down just 0.8 percent, to $14.16 billion, while the surplus in services increased 0.9 percent, to $4.80 billion.

The United States historically runs a surplus in services, but not enough to erase the merchandise deficit.

For the first six months of this year, the United States was running an annual merchandise deficit of $141.2 billion, which would be the worst showing since an all-time record of $152.1 billion in 1987.

In a second report Thursday, the Labor Department said the number of Americans filing new claims for unemployment insurance rose a modest 3,000 last week, to a seasonally adjusted 327,000.

Observers attributed the second straight weekly gain to slower hiring in the late summer after substantial job gains early in the year.

Analysts said "still-sluggish" economies in Europe and Japan will keep export growth from reaching its potential this year, while the improving U.S. economy provides American consumers with funds to buy more foreign products.

But Evelyn Hines of Prime Economic Consulting of Chicago said the deficit should begin to narrow again over the next 18 months.

"Recoveries are beginning to emerge in Japan and Europe," she explained, "while demand from other countries in the Asian Pacific and Mexico will be importing from the United States."

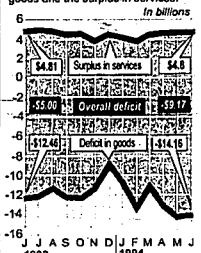

"On the other hand," she added, "our import growth should moderate" as the economy slows from its aggressively strong pace of the first half of the year.

Commerce Secretary Ron Brown said that despite the continuing deficit, the report contained signs of a sustainable economic expansion.

"Strong growth of imports of capital tal goods suggest that the capacity is expanding and the continuing increases in exports in spite of sluggish growth abroad suggests that U.S. competitiveness is strong," he said.

In addition to increased merchandise shipments overseas, exports of services grew $270 million in June, due largely to increased foreign travel related to the first World Cup soccer matches ever held in this country.

Starting this year, the government has been including both merchandise and services, such as tourism and royalty payments, in its monthly trade reports.

Both increased volume and rising prices helped boost America's foreign oil sales by $66 million in June.

Crude oil volume was a record 249.29 million barrels, breaking the previous high of 230 million barrels in July 1993. The cost of crude oil rose to an average of $15.14 per 42-gallon barrel, from $14.04 in May.

The U.S. deficit with Japan continued to be America's largest. It shot up $1.13 billion to $5.52 billion, the biggest since March when it totaled $5.8 billion. Imports from Japan totaled $10.08 billion, also the highest since March, when they totaled $10.61 billion.

Oil bill deficits were with China, $2.20 billion; Western Europe, $1.82 billion; and Canada, $1.29 billion.

Surpluses included Australia, $559 million; Hong Kong, $431 million; Mexico, 198 million; Egypt, $186 million; and Argentina, $157 million.

Stocks, bonds, dollar fall as inflation fears reignite

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stocks fell in sympathy with Treasury bonds and the dollar, as a Philadelphia regional economic report reignited inflation fears.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 21.05 to 3,755.43.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by nearly 13 to 9 on the New York Stock Exchange. Big Board volume totaled 284.98 million shares, down from 312.84 million on Wednesday.

The benchmark 30-year Treasury bond was down 1-1/2 point late in the day. Its yield stood at 7.48 percent, up from 7.40 percent on Wednesday.

Both the stock and bond markets were responding to a Philadelphia Federal Reserve Bank survey of area manufacturers. The report showed that despite some signs of a slowdown in economic activity, prices continue to rise.

The Philadelphia Fed's index of economic activity rose to 13.9 this month from 11.3 in July, suggesting that the area's manufacturing sector continues to expand.

Some indicators in the report suggested the opposite notion, that growth has slowed. New manufacturing orders edged lower, and the percentage of firms expecting to add to their payrolls was nearly offset by the number anticipating job cuts.

Particularly troubling to the financial markets was a sharp jump in the Philadelphia Fed's prices-paid index, from 26.4 in July to 48.4 this month.

That was the highest reading in more than five years. Analysts said that figure, taken with other indicators in the report, could signal that prices are rising despite slow growth.

The Philadelphia survey stoked fears that the Federal Reserve's 0.5-percent increase in short-term interest rates last Tuesday will not be enough to curb inflation. Some analysts concluded that the central bank will have to tighten credit again, possibly as soon as its September Open Market Committee meeting.

Higher rates raise the risk of fixed-income investments more attractive than stocks, and they eventually spell weaker profit margins and lower stock prices by raising corporate costs, analysts noted.

Also vexing the stock market was a drop in the dollar against the Japanese yen, particularly the Deutsche mark. The dollar weakened in sympathy with bonds and in response to concerns about the U.S. trade deficit with Japan.

The expectation of higher interest rates sent economically sensitive stocks lower, particularly the Japanese Big Three auto makers. Ford fell 1/4 to 29 1/2, Chrysler slid 1/4 to 47 1/2 and General Motors lost 1/4 to 49 1/2.

Gold stocks rose as gold surged. On the American Stock Exchange, Echo Bay rose 1/4 to 1 1/4, and Pegasus rose 1/4 to 1 1/4.

Technology issues held firm for most of the day after IBM rose sharply, but gave up steam near the close. The Nasdaq composite, which is heavily weighted in technology issues, ended 0.49 lower at 742.17.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"Unless you enter the tiger's den, you cannot take the cubs." —Japanese proverb.

In poker, a player holding an inferior hand bluffs. Careful to winning pot, convincing his opponent to fold the better hand. Bridge players sometimes use the same tactics. Here's an example from the 1982 World Olympics played in Biarritz, France. Sanders of Nashville, Tenn., and Betty Ann Kennedy of Shreveport, La., captured the Women's Pairs Championship. Today's hand helped them to victory.

Carol took East's club jack when her queen and led a heart to dummy's 10. East's queen. East returned the club nine to dummy's ace, and dummy's spade 10 was covered by the queen and ace. Carol led another heart, planning on a second finesse, but put dummy's ace when West discarded.

What now? Even if spades were 3-3, Carol knew she could win only eight tricks. So it was time to bluff. She boldly led the diamond queen from dummy. West was West to win the trick. What was West to think? Placing Carol with the 10-3 of clubs, West decided, believing it wouldn't pay to win to lead clubs. And did Carol quit and cash out? No, she continued to the diamond jack. West was now certain Carol had the 10-3 of clubs, and instead of cashing clubs, West exited "safely" with a diamond. When the spades also came home, Carol had an over-trick and another top score on the way to victory.

Q: What's this about Janet Jackson breaking down in tears during recent concert performances? Is it because of her brother Michael? — B.Y.

A: My Chicago spy saw her concert recently and confirmed that she cried twice as real tears during her performance. A sexy, 28-year-old, who was married and divorced before she was 20, Janet is a highly emotional performer. Although her current CD is an affirmation of her adult sexuality, Jackson conveys onstage a pronounced little-girl vulnerability. The tears had nothing to do with brother Michael. This was a rare public view of Janet's very sensitive personality. An appreciative audience greeted the tears with roars of understanding and approval.

Q: What's this about Michael Caine having an affair with novelist Jackie Collins? — A.R.

A: Just because the title of Collins' next book is "Hollywood Divorces," Jackie and Caine are not an item. They are, however, close pals. In his autobiography, "What's It All About," the British actor, born Maurice Micklewhite, refers to Collins as his "second Hollywood wife." Caine has been happily married for years to his "first Hollywood wife," Shakira; the couple has a grown daughter. As for Jackie, she's a widow — her longtime husband, Oscar Terman, died some time ago.

Q: Since the Hispanic market in America is a big money-maker for the entertainment business, which performer is the top earner? — H.M.

A: Julio Iglesias reigns supreme with expected earnings for '93-'94 said to be more than $50 million.

Jackson

Celebrity gossip

Q: Isn't it true that both physically and mentally, Don Johnson is in a really bad way? Are his marital problems getting him down? — M.R.

battle with alcoholism have taken a toll. She has been appearing lately as a single. She recently vacationed in Maui with two of the couple's children, sons Don. Latest word from my Hollywood spy is that Johnson has emerged from the rehab stint at the Betty Ford clinic feeling in good shape, physically. He was last seen relaxing at the couple's home in Aspen, Colo., with his son Jesse.

Q: Is Harrison Ford really the gentleman his "handlers" would have us believe or is that just pr. hype? — R.T.

A: If his recent participation in a San Francisco press junket clears and presents a "Dan-junk" is any indication, Harrison Ford is a state-of-the-art gentleman and movie star. He was gracious to any and all representatives of Paramount, who guided him through his admittedly least favorite aspect of filmmaking — publicity — and he was charming, friendly, and approachable to everyone.

Q: Are San Francisco's cable cars the most frequently used TV and film locations in the City by the Bay? — L.J.

A: Although San Francisco is most closely identified by the cable cars, according to the city's Film Office, the most popular location is the Palace of Fine-Arts followed by, in order, the cable car lines, Chinatown, Golden Gate Park and the War Memorial complex.

dates this summer in such gambling spas as Lake Tahoe, Las Vegas and Atlantic City.

Q: What's Michael Moriarty doing these days after being kicked off TV's "Law and Order" for making controversial remarks about TV violence? — G.N.

A: After leaving the TV series, Michael did a brief stage stint playing Professor Henry Higgins in a stage revival of "My Fair Lady." In addition to being a musician, who regularly plays in New York jazz spots, Moriarty is now hosting a TV talk show on cable. He claims he left "Law and Order" because of a dispute about censorship and TV violence. Michael favors what he calls a "libertarian" position, meaning that virtually anything goes, despite the sensitivities of politicians and Attorney General Janet Reno, an outspoken foe of violence on the tube.

Q: We love Geena Davis and wonder if her new husband, Renny Harlin, has any kind of name or fame in Finland, his homeland? — J.O.

A: Renny Harlin, who directed "Cliffhanger" and "Die Hard 2," among others, is not only one of Finland's most popular celebrities, but also quite an entrepreneur who owns an amusement park, restaurants and nightclubs there. The couple, married last September, will soon relocate to a newly purchased Santa Monica million dollar home.

Davis

New 'ATWT' actor adjusts to stardom

This past Valentine's Day Shawn Christian began his role as Mike Kasnoff on "As the World Turns." Looking back, he says it seems appropriate because he certainly thinks of himself as a romantic. On "ATWT" the Mike Kasnoff character may show decidedly more romantic tendencies towards Rosanna (Yvonne Perry), but he is not the settled-down type, at least not yet.

Shawn Christian
'Romantic' on ATWT

John N. Goudas

Christian laughs when he realizes that if it was not for running out of funds during his last year in college (Ferris State University in Big Rapids, Michigan), he would probably be toiling in marketing these days. His original job goal in life.

"I was one year short of a marketing degree—which, incidentally, I did eventually earn—when my father told me cash was in short supply," Christian told us in a recent interview. "So I heard you could earn some good money by modeling and I figured I'd give it a try, and it did pay the bills. But more importantly, it opened the door for my involvement with acting. I knew from the first acting class I took that this was for me. I felt at home and I had to pursue it."

In Grand Rapids, Michigan, upon his arrival in the Windy City, Christian was cast in commercials and earned a good living while taking acting courses and honing his skills.

Last year he was selected as the first male spokesman on "Star Search" and this opened a few other doors. However, he was not ready to make a permanent move to tel-ther New York City or Hollywood until he auditioned for the part of Mike on "As the World Turns" and won it. Although the move to the Big Apple may have curbed some of Christian's hobbies—water-skiing, hydro-skiing and camping—he the actor is enjoying city life and has nothing but high praise for the co-workers he says are all true professionals.

Christian is a happy guy these days and is just getting used to being asked for his autograph. According to "ATWT" producers, Christian is working out very well and the fan mail indicates viewers like Mike Kasnoff but he is not likely to let anyone push him around.

"As the World Turns" generally paints its male characters heavily dark (syllables, or light factors). It is interesting to note that Mike Kasnoff does not fit neatly into either category. He is not all heroic, nor is he likely to be villainous. He is just a fairly secure guy matching to his own drumbeat.

Q: We've heard that Bill Bixby died penniless. Is that possible, since he had such a successful career? He starred in three hit series, "My Favorite Martian," "The Courtship of Eddie's Father" and "The Incredible Hulk," plus he was directing the hit TV series "Blossom" before he died. Also, what did he die of? — N.B.

Celebrity gossip

A: Bixby left a considerable estate and in his will made arrangements for a sizable donation to public TV. His widow plans to honor his wish when their townhouse, on the market for $875,000, is sold. Bixby died of prostate cancer.

Q: What's this about sultry actress Michele Lee, formerly of "Knots Landing," turning into a country singer? Can that be true? — L.U.

A: It may be hard to believe but Lee is taking a real stab at warbling country tunes — specifically, the hits made popular by the legendary Dottie West. Michele, born 52 years ago with the uncoun-

Lee

West. Lee, who has appeared in a number of Broadway shows, was in 'n' told, able to belt out such tunes as "Country Sunshine" with great authority. In "The Dottie West Story," Michele will have Kenny Rogers, Dolores Parton and Loretta Lynn on hand for counsel and advice.
